§While theoretically general, the suffrage is so classified as often practically to disfranchise those who are not property holders.

2. The function or act of legislating. Obs.

le'gist (lē'jĭst), n. [F. légiste, or LL. legista, fr. L. lex, legis, law. See LEGAL.] One skilled in the laws, esp. the written laws of the Roman civil law.

leg'i-tim (lĕj'ĭ-tĭm), n. [F. légitime, fr. légitime legitimate, L. legitimus. See LEGITIMATE, a.] Roman & Civil Law. The portion of the estate to which, upon the death of the father, the children are entitled, or, in the later Roman law, in default of children, ascendants, or in some cases brothers and sisters. Legitim includes both real and personal property in Roman law and in some modern systems where no distinction is made in the descent of the two kinds; but in Scots law, and as it formerly existed in English law, it includes only movables. In South Africa legitim was abolished by Cape Act 23, 1874, § 2, and (for the Transvaal) by Proclamation 28, 1902. In Roman law the legitim was at first one fourth, later, under Justinian, one third, and in some cases one half. In Scots law it is one third, and is due from both the father's and (since 1881) the mother's estate. It cannot be affected by any testamentary provision made by the decedent without cause. Cf. DEAD'S PART.

le-git'i-ma-cy (lē-jĭt'ĭ-mā-sĭ), n. [See LEGITIMATE, a.] State or quality of being legitimate; as, the legitimacy of a child, a sovereign or his right to rule, a reason, etc. Any child born during coverture or after coverture has ceased by reason of the husband's death is presumed to be legitimate, except upon proof of a sufficient time since cohabitation or death to preclude the possibility of the husband being the father of the child. The length of time necessary is not fixed, but in general is not more than nine calendar months or 40 weeks. Cf. GESTATION.

le-git'i-mate (-māt), a. [LL. legitimatus, p. p. of legitimare to legitimate, fr. L. legitimus legitimate. See LEGAL.]

le-git'i-mate (lē-jĭt'ĭ-māt), v. t.; LE-GIT'I-MAT'ED (-māt'ĕd); LE-GIT'I-MAT'ING (-māt'ĭng). To make legitimate; specif.: a To make lawful or legal; to give legal force or authorization to; as, to legitimate silver. Hence, to authorize or justify. "Even to legitimate vice." Milton. b To put (a bastard) in the position or state of a legitimate child before the law, by legal means; — distinguished from adopt, which has no reference to blood-relation. By the common law, as it still exists in England and Ireland and in some of the United States, bastards cannot be legitimated; but in Scotland and on the Continent of Europe generally, and by statute in many States of the United States, children are now legitimated by the subsequent marriage of their parents, provided the parents might legally have married at the time of the child's birth. Other means of legitimation formerly were recognized in some jurisdictions.

le-git'i-ma'tion (-mā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. légitimation.] 1. Act or process of making legitimate, as, the legitimation (see LEGITIMATE b) of a child.

Leib-nitz'i-an-ism } (līp-nĭt'sĭ-ăn-ĭz'm), n. The philoso-Leib-niz'i-an-ism } phy of Gottfried Wilhelm von Leibnitz, or Leibniz, or Lubeniecz (1646–1716). When Locke published his famous book on the understanding, there was much talk of a dictum wrongly referred to Aristotle: nothing in the intellect that was not previously in sense perception. Leibnitz replied "nihil nisi intellectus ipse," intimating that some knowledge is derived by the intellect from its own structure. This thought was expanded in one of the longest books of Leibnitz, the Nouveaux Essais, wherein he calls this knowledge, derived from the structure of the self, apper ception (which see), to distinguish it from that derived from sense perception. Thus furnished Kant the vital point of his first Critique, viz., his "transcendental unity of apperception" (see KANTIANISM), from which he deduced his categories. Leibnitz shows on every occasion the deep impression made on his mind by the philosophy of Aristotle, taught him at school and university. Particularly, the thought of entelechy (see ARISTOTELIANISM and ENTELECHY) as living beings the world. is mentioned by him in the monadology to explain his monads, which are self-active beings or substances which have different degrees of perfection, the highest have reached to thought, and are human souls; the next degree have as animals attained sense perception and locomotion; the next lower as plants, to nutrition and reproduction; still lower are minerals, which have crystallization, and below them elements, that have chemical affinities. In general all beings in the world are monads or groups of monads, and every one possesses, in greater or less degree, the power of reflecting, in itself, by its own activity, the rest of the universe. One thinks of gravitation as in some sense a reflection or representation in an inorganic body of all other bodies, and of light as another activity of inorganic bodies, constituting a higher order of representation, and as having a sort of potency that reaches its fuller reality in vegetation, animal life, and the human soul. Plotinus in his third Ennead (§ 8) says: "The plants and even the soil that bears them aspire to attain to a vision of true being (to Aristotle's highest order of self-activity, theorein, θεωρεῖν, called the Beatific Vision). Nature produces inorganic things as a sort of object to herself, dreaming in the plant, feeling in the animal, and thinking in man." Each monad thus mirrors the entire universe of monads according to its own style and degree of development in self-activity. All that have attained the stage of thought and of "eternal truths become a sort of society with God and are members of the City of God." This thought dawned early in the mind of Leibnitz and led him to efforts to unite all Christendom, just then sundered by the Thirty Years' War and its causes. His creation of the differential calculus was a stroke of genius, showing how firm was his grasp of science even in the realms of the inorganic and of pure mechanism. W. T. Harris.

Leib'nitz's se'ries (līp'nĭt-sĭz). Math. The formula for the *n*th derivative of a product: $(uv)_n = u_n v_n + nu_{n-1}v_1 + \ldots + nu_{n-1}v_1 + u_n v_n$, where the subscripts denote derivation and the coefficients are the binomial coefficients.

lem'on (lĕm'ŭn), n. [F. limon, Per. līmūn; cf. Ar. laimūn, Sp. limón, It. limone. Cf. LIME a fruit.] 1. The well-known acid fruit of the rutaceous tree Citrus medica limon. Botanically the lemon is a syncarpous, polycarpellary, many-seeded, pale yellow berry, of oblong form, usually umbonate at the apex. The rind, or exocarp, contains the fragrant oil of lemon, and is often candied or preserved. Lemon juice is the chief source of citric acid, and is also used in cookery, in beverages, and as an antiscorbutic.

2. The tree which bears this fruit. It has flowers often tinged with pink. Numerous varieties are cultivated. The so-called bitter lemon grows, half wild, on the Florida Keys, but its fruit is useless. See CITRON, LIME, CITRUS.

3. With attributive or qualifying word, any of numerous trees and shrubs of other families having lemonlike fruit, as wild lemon, native lemon, etc.

4. The color of a lemon; = LEMON YELLOW a.

le'mur (lē'mŭr), n. [L., a ghost, specter.] 1. pl. = LEMURES. Rare.

2. [So called on account of its habit of going abroad by night.] Any of numerous arboreal, chiefly nocturnal mammals allied to the monkeys, but usually regarded as constituting a distinct suborder, Lemuroidea. In general form and habits they resemble monkeys, but nearly all have a sharp foxlike muzzle, large eyes, and very soft woolly fur. The tail, though sometimes rudimentary, is usually long and furry, but never prehensile. The brain is relatively small, and differs from that of monkeys in having the cerebellum exposed. The placenta is nondeciduate. As in monkeys, the mammæ are pectoral and the thumbs and toes opposable. Most lemurs are confined to Madagascar and adjacent islands, but representatives occur in Africa and the Oriental region. Fossil forms have been found in Europe, Asia, and America. The so-called flying lemur is now classed with the Insectivora. See AYE-AYE, TARSIER, GALAGO, POTTO, LORIS, etc.

Lemur (Lemur albifrons). ($\frac{1}{8}$)

lem'u-res (lĕm'ū-rēz), n. pl. [L. See LEMUR.] Rom. Relig. Spirits of the dead; ghosts. In the later conception the name was sometimes regarded as a generic term covering the lares, regarded as beneficent spirits, the larvæ, as maleficent, and the manes, as indeterminate. The chief feast of the lemures was the Le-mu'ri-a, held May 9, 11, and 13, when the temples were closed and midnight offerings made by the head of the house. Cf. LARES, MANES.

> The Lars and Lemures moan with midnight plaint. Milton.

Le-mu'ri-dæ (lē-mū'rĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.] Zoöl. The family consisting of all the living Lemuroidea except the aye-aye and the tarsier. It is divided into four subfamilies, one, Lem'u-ri'næ (lĕm'ū-rī'nē), containing the typical lemurs.

Le-næ'a (lē-nē'ă), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. Ληναια, prop neut. pl. of ληναῖος pertaining to the wine press, fr. ληνός wine press.] Gr. Relig. An Attic festival of Dionysus, celebrated in the month Gamelion (January–February). After a great banquet the people went in procession through the city, with the usual jesting and mockery, to the theater, to witness plays. Cf. DIONYSIA. — Le-næ'an (-ăn), a.

Le-nard' rays (lē-närt'). Physics. Rays emanating from the outer surface of a plate composed of any material permeable by cathode rays, as aluminium, which forms a portion of a wall of a vacuum tube, or which is mounted within the tube and is exposed to radiation from the cathode. Lenard rays are similar in all their known properties to cathode rays, but do not emanate from the cathode itself. So called from the German physicist Philip Lenard (b. 1862), who first described them.

Lenard tube. Elec. A tube for producing Lenard rays.

Len'no-a'ce-æ (lĕn'ō-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of fleshy parasitic herbs (order Ericales), natives of California and Mexico, comprising three genera, Lennoa, Pholisma, and Ammobroma, the last two of which are monotypic. They are destitute of green foliage, and have small flowers and a 2-celled fruit. — len'no-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

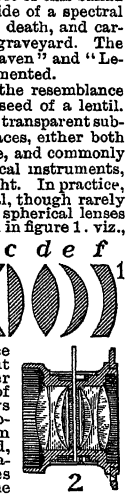
le'no (lē'nō), n. [F. linon.] A light open cotton fabric, used for window curtains, etc.

Le-nore' (lē-nōr'; G. lē-nō'rē), n. [G.] The heroine of a popular ballad composed by Gottfried August Bürger (1748–94), a German lyric poet. The subject of this ballad is an old tradition, which recounts the ride of a spectral lover, who reappears to his mistress after death, and carries her on horseback behind him to the graveyard. The name is used also by Poe, in his "The Raven" and "Lenore," as that of a lady whose death is lamented.

lens (lĕnz), n. [L. lens a lentil; — from the resemblance in shape of a double convex lens to the seed of a lentil. Cf. LENTIL.] 1. a A piece of glass, or other transparent substance, having two opposite regular surfaces, either both curved, or one curved and the other plane, and commonly used, either singly or combined, in optical instruments, for changing the direction of rays of light. In practice, the curved surfaces are usually spherical, though rarely cylindrical, or of some other figure. Of spherical lenses there are six varieties, as shown in section in figure 1. viz., a plano-concave; b double concave, or biconcave; c plano-convex; d double convex, or biconvex; e converging concavo-convex, or converging meniscus; f diverging concavo-convex, or diverging meniscus. All simple lenses are subject to chromatic aberration, and those of spherical surface show in addition spherical aberration; but these defects can be obviated by a proper combination of lenses. b A combination of two or more simple lenses. Figure 2 shows a section of a double anastigmatic photographic lens, consisting of a combination of two achromatic lenses. c A device used, on the same principle, for some form of radiation other than light; as, sound waves may be converged by a convex lens of the gas carbon dioxide inclosed in a thin membrane.



Lenses, 1.

2. Specif.: Anat. & Zoöl. In the eyes of animals with well-developed visual organs, a transparent body of biconvex (in many cases nearly spherical) form, whose function it is to bring the rays of light to a focus upon the retina; the crystalline lens (which see). See EYE. In vertebrates and some invertebrates (mollusks) it is composed of modified cells; in other cases (arthropods) it may be formed of noncellular cuticle.

3. Any object resembling a lentil or the double-convex optical lens in form; as, a lens of ore, a lens of sandstone.

4. [cap.] Bot. a Syn. of LENTILLA. b A genus of mimosaceous climbing shrubs having pinnate leaves and large woody-valved pods. L. phaseoloides is the snuffbox bean.

lens joint. A pipe joint in which a gun-metal ring with spherical surfaces is gripped between the two pipe sections. It is self-adjustable to slight lateral play.

Lent (lĕnt), n. [ME. lente, lenten, leynte, AS. lenglen, lencten, spring, lent; akin to D. lente, OHG. lenzin, langiz, G. lenz, and perh. fr. AS. lang long, E. long, because at this season of the year the days lengthen.] 1. [l. c.] Springtime. Obs.

2. Eccl. The annual season of fasting in the spring, observed by many churches as a preparation for the great feast of Easter and as a time of special penitence, and in the Western Church since the early Middle Ages fixed in duration at forty days, which have been established as the forty week days preceding Easter, the first being Ash Wednesday. The six Sundays occurring in this period are excluded from Lent, for the reason that Sunday is always a feast, and hence are called Sundays in (not of) Lent. In the early church, the duration of Lent either was not fixed or varied in the churches in different places, but from the early part of the 4th century the period of fasting appears to have approximated more or less closely in most places to forty days, the fast being extended over six weeks or seven weeks, according as Sundays only or Sundays and Saturdays were excepted. In the Eastern Church, Lent, called often Great Lent or the Great Fast to distinguish it from three other periods of fasting to which the name Lent (see def. 5) is applied by Western writers, begins on the Monday after Quinquagesima. The forty days are regarded as being kept after the example of Moses (Ex. xxxiv. 28) and Elijah (1 Kings xix. 8), and above all as commemorating the fasting of Christ (Matt. iv. 2). Also, with a, one instance of this season; any particular season of Lent. In the Middle Ages, when Lent was applied to other seasons of fasting, the spring fast was called the Great Lent or Clean Lent, the latter name probably alluding to the preceding confession and absolution.

3. Fig.: Any period likened to Lent.

4. pl. The boat races at Cambridge University in Lent.

5. A period of fasting, as: in the Middle Ages, one before Christmas (Lent of St. Martin) or one before St. John Baptist's Day, June 24 (Lent of St. John Baptist); in the Eastern Church, one between St. Philip's Day (Nov. 14) and Christmas, one after All Saints' Sunday (corresponding to the Western Trinity Sunday), and one from Aug. 1 to 14.

‖ len'ta-men'te (lĕn'tȧ-mĕn'tā), adv. [It.] Music. Slowly.

‖ len-tan'do (lĕn-tän'dō), a. [It., p. pr. of lentare to make slow. Cf. LENT, a.] Music. Slackening; retarding. = RALLENTANDO.

Lent'en (lĕn'tĕn), a. [often l. c.] [From ME. lenten lent. See LENT, n.] 1. Of or pertaining to the fast called Lent; used in, or suitable to, Lent; as, the Lenten season.

2. Spare; meager; plain; somber; unostentatious; not abundant or showy. "Lenten entertainment." "Lenten answer." Shak. "Lenten suit." Beau. & Fl.

Lenten color or colour, black or violet — L. corn or grain, grain sown in Lent. Eng. — L. fig, a dried fig or a raisin. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

len'ti-cel (lĕn'tĭ-sĕl), n. [F. lenticelle, dim. fr. L. lens, lentis, a lentil. Cf. LENTIL.] Bot. One of the cortical pores in the stems of woody plants by means of which air penetrates to the interior. Lenticels consist of a loose mass of corky cells developed in a special phellogen layer, and are almost always directly beneath the stomata in the epidermis, which is ruptured by their growth. On the surface they appear as lens-shaped spots, or warts, being prominent on young shoots of apple, pear, and other trees.

2. Optics. A lens of small size.

3. Bot. a A lenticel. Rare. b A spore case in certain fungi. Lindley. Obs.

len-tic'u-lar (-lär), a. [L. lenticularis. See LENS, LENTIL.] 1. Resembling a lentil in size or form; having the form of a double-convex lens.

2. Of or pertaining to a lens, the crystalline lens, or the lenticular nucleus.

lenticular bone. Zoöl. = LENTICULARE. — l. fever. Med. = MILIARY FEVER. Obs. — l. ganglion, Anat., the ciliary ganglion. — l. iron ore, an argillaceous hematite composed of small flattened grains. — l. knife or instrument, Surg., a scraping instrument used in trepanning and osteotomy. — l. nucleus, Anat., the larger and external nucleus of the corpus striatum. It is an oval or lens-shaped mass of gray matter, continuous in front with the caudate nucleus, but elsewhere separated from the latter and from the optic thalamus by the internal capsule, and is divided into three divisions, the outer and larger of which (the putamen) is reddish in color, while the two inner are of a pale yellow tint and constitute the globus pallidus. — l. process, Anat., the tip of the long process of the incus which articulates with the stapes. In some mammals it forms a separate lenticular ossicle. In the human fetus it is a separate piece, called the orbicular bone. — l. truss, Arch. & Engin., a truss having both top and bottom chords "broken," or made up of short lengths, so as to approach a curved form, the whole resembling a section or profile of a lens.

len-tig'i-nose (lĕn-tĭj'ĭ-nōs), a. [See LENTIGINOUS.] Bot. & Zoöl. Bearing numerous dots resembling freckles; speckled.

len-tig'i-nous (-nŭs), a. [L. lentiginosus. See LENTIGO.] Of or pert. to lentigo; freckly; scurfy; also, lentiginose.

len-ti'go (lĕn-tī'gō), n.; pl. -TIGINES (-tĭj'ĭ-nēz). [L., fr lens, lentis, lentil.] A freckly eruption on the skin; freckle.

len'til (lĕn'tĭl), n. [F. lentille, fr. L. lenticula, dim. of lens, lentis, lentil. Cf. LENS.] 1. a A fabaceous annual plant (Lentilla lens) widely cultivated in southern Europe and the Orient for its flattened lens-shaped seeds, which are cooked like peas or beans and are also ground into meal. The leafy stalks are used also for fodder. The lentil of the Scriptures probably included several other vetchlike plants. b The seeds of this plant, either whole or split in halves.

2. Duckweed. Obs.

3. Geol. A thin-edged stratum of limited extent inclosed by strata of different material.

Len-til'la (lĕn-tĭl'ȧ), n. [NL.] Bot. A small genus of Old World fabaceous herbs related to the vetches. L. lens is the common lentil.

‖ len'to (lĕn'tō), a. & adv. [It.] Music. Slow; slowly.

len'toid (lĕn'toid), a. [See LENS; -OID.] Lens-shaped.

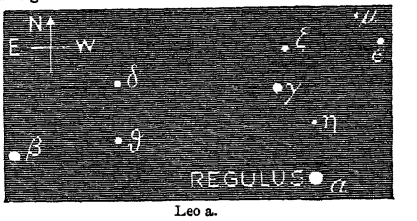
Lenz's law (lĕnts'sĭz). Elec. The law that in electromagnetic induction the direction of the induced current is such as to oppose the motion producing it. It was first stated by H. F. E. Lenz, a German physician and physicist.

Le'o (lē'ō), n.; gen. LEONIS (lē-ō'nĭs). [L. See LION.] Astron. a A northern constellation east of Cancer, containing the bright star Regulus at the end of the handle of the Sickle; the Lion. A line drawn south through the Pointers passes through this constellation (see Illust. below). b The fifth sign of the zodiac. See SIGN.



Leo a.

Leo Minor, Astron., a small constellation between Leo and Ursa Major.

Le'o-nar-desque' (lē'ō-när-dĕsk'), a. After the style of the painter Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519), whose work is remarkable for draftsmanship, but is devoid of the charm of color and marked by excess of contrast in light and shade. — n. An imitator or follower of Leonardo; also, a Leonardesque picture.

Le'o-nese' (lē'ō-nēz'; -nēs'), a. Of or pertaining to Leon, a former kingdom in northwestern Spain including the present provinces of Salamanca, Zamora, and Leon. It was permanently joined to Castile in 1230. — n. a (sing. & pl.) A native of Leon. b The Spanish dialect spoken in Leon.

Le'o-nid (lē'ō-nĭd), n.; pl. E. LEONIDS (-nĭdz), L. LEONIDES (lē-ŏn'ĭ-dēz). [From LEO: cf. F. léonides, pl. See 1st -ID.] Astron. One of the shooting stars which constitute the star shower that recurs near the 14th of November at intervals of about 33 years, and less prominently each intervening year; — so called because these shooting stars appear on the heavens to move in lines directed from the constellation Leo. The shower of 1899 was much less striking than that of 1866, and calculations indicate that the course of the Leonids has been disturbed by the attraction of Jupiter.

le'o-nine (-nĭn; 277), a. [L. leoninus, fr. leo, leonis, lion: cf. F. léonin. See LION.] Pertaining to, or characteristic of, the lion; as, leonine rapacity. — le'o-nine-ly, adv.

leonine partnership, Law, a partnership in which one partner is made liable for a share in the losses, but is not entitled to share in the profits. Such a partnership is illegal.

Le'o-nine, a. Of or pertaining to a person named Leo or Leonimus, as one of the thirteen popes named Leo.

Leonine city, the part of Rome containing the Vatican. — L. Sacramentary. See SACRAMENTARY, n., 1. — L. verse, a kind of Latin verse, consisting of hexameters, or alternating hexameters and elegiac pentameters, in which the end of the line rimes with the word just before the middle cæsura; as, "Gloria factorum temere concreditur horum;" — said to be so named from Leo, or Leoninus, a Benedictine and canon of Paris in the 12th century, who, though not its inventor, wrote largely in this verse.

le'on-ti'a-sis (lē'ŏn-tī'ȧ-sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λεοντίασις an early stage of elephantiasis, fr. λέων, λέοντος, lion.] Med. A form of leprosy affecting the face and giving it a leonine appearance. — le'on-ti'a-sis os'si-um (ŏsh'ĭ-ŭm) [NL., leontiasis of the bones], Med., a disease of the bones producing nodules, or causing partial hypertrophy.

le-on'to-ceph'a-lous (lē-ŏn'tō-sĕf'ȧ-lŭs), a. [Gr. λέων, λεοντος, lion + κεφαλή head.] Having a lion's head.

Le-on'to-don (lē-ŏn'tō-dŏn), n. [Gr. λέων, λέοντος, lion + ὀδούς, ὀδόντος, tooth. Cf. LION'S-TOOTH, DANDELION.] Bot. A large genus of European cichoriaceous plants distinguished by the smooth achenes and naked receptacle. L. autumnalis is the fall dandelion.

Le-on'to-po'di-um (-pō'dĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λεοντοπόδιον a kind of plant, lit., lion's foot; λέων, λέοντος, lion + πούς, ποδός, foot.] Bot. A small genus of woolly asteraceous herbs, natives of mountains of Europe and the Andes of South America. L. leontopodium is the edelweiss.

Le'o-nu'rus (lē'ō-nū'rŭs), n. [NL., Gr. λέων lion + οὐρά tail.] Bot. A small genus of Old World menthaceous plants having axillary whorls of flowers, incised leaves, and angled nutlets. L. cardiaca is the motherwort; this and L. sibirica are sometimes cultivated.

leop'ard (lĕp'ẽrd), n. [ME. leopart, leparde, lebarde, libbard, OF. leopard, liepart, F. léopard, L leopardus, fr. Gr. λεόπαρδος; λέων lion + πάρδος pard. See LION; PARD.] 1. A large and ferocious spotted cat (Felis pardus) of southern Asia and Africa. Its color is tawny or buff with black spots arranged in broken rings or rosettes, but not inclosing smaller central black spots, as in the jaguar. It is somewhat arboreal, and often lies in ambush for its prey, which consists of almost all animals weaker than itself. Sometimes even human beings are attacked. A black phase is known, usually showing the spotted pattern in certain lights. Called also panther. The American leopard is the jaguar. See also SNOW LEOPARD, HUNTING LEOPARD.

2. Her. A lion depicted as walking and looking about him after the manner of a leopard; a lion passant gardant.

3. A gold coin bearing the image of a crowned lion, struck by Edward III. for use in France. Value, $2.31. See COIN.

leopard flower. The blackberry lily; — so called from the spotted perianth.

leopard frog. A common American frog (Rana pipiens). It is usually bright green and has large irregular black, white-margined blotches on the back. The limbs are barred and the belly is pale. See FROG, Illust.

leopard lily. a A Californian lily (Lilium pardalinum) with mottled orange-colored flowers. b The South African liliaceous plant Lachenalia pendula, with spotted flowers.

leopard lizard. A large lizard (Crotaphytus wislizenii) of the southwestern United States; — so called because of its numerous black spots and bars.

leopard moth. A large European moth (Zeuzera pyrina), with white wings thickly spotted with black. Its larva does great damage by boring in fruit and shade trees.

leop'ard's-bane' (lĕp'ĕrdz-bān'), n. a Any asteraceous plant of the genus Doronicum. b Arnica. c Herb Paris. All these plants were once thought poisonous to animals.

leopard shark. a A small California shark (Triakis semifasciatum) with black spots on the body. b A tiger shark.

leopard toadfish. A spotted toadfish (Opsanus pardus), of the Gulf coast of the United States.

leopard tree. An Australian meliaceous tree (Flindersia maculata); — so called from the spotted bark.

leop'ard-wood' (lĕp'ĕrd-wo͝od'), n. The handsomely mottled hard wood of a South American moraceous tree (Brosimum aubletii), used for veneering; the tree itself.

Le/o-pol-din'i-a (lē/ŏ-pōl-dĭn'ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL, after Leopoldine, wife of Dom Pedro I., of Brazil.] Bot. A small genus of Brazilian pinnate-leaved palms. They yield a useful fiber, L. piassaba being one of the sources of piassaba.

Lep'ar-gy-re'a (lĕp'ȧr-jĭ-rē'ȧ), n. [NL.; Gr. λεπίς a scale + ἄργυρος silver.] Bot. A small genus of American elæagnaceous shrubs distinguished by the silvery or scurfy foliage, small dicœcious flowers, and baccate fruit. The species are called buffalo berry.

lep'er (lĕp'ĕr), n. [ME. lepre leprosy, F. lèpre, L leprae, lepra, fr. Gr. λέπρα, fr. λεπρός scaly, fr. λέπος scale, λέπειν to peel.] 1. Leprosy. Obs.

2. A person affected with leprosy.

lep'ered (-ĕrd), a. Affected or tainted with leprosy.

lep'i-dine (lĕp'ĭ-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. Also -din. [From the botanical genus Lepidium. See LEPIDIUM.] Org. Chem. An oily, nitrogenous base, $C_9H_7{\cdot}N{\cdot}CH_3$, found in coal tar, and obtained by the distillation of cinchonine and by other methods. It is a methyl derivative of quinoline.

Le-pid'i-um (lē-pĭd'ĭ-ŭm), n. [L., a plant, prob. peppergrass, Gr. λεπίδιον, dim. of λεπίς a scale.] Bot. A large genus of brassicaceous herbs, the peppergrasses, having small white, sometimes apetalous, flowers, the fruit being an oblong flattened silicle, with one seed in each cell. The species are widely distributed as weeds. L. sativum is the common garden pepper cress.

lep'i-do- (lĕp'ĭ-dŏ-). A combining form from Greek λεπίς, λεπίδος, scale.

Lep'i-do-den-dra'ce-æ (-dĕn-drā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See LEPIDODENDRON.] Paleobot. A family of fossil pteridophytic plants of the order Lycopodiales, containing several genera represented by remains of stems, leaves, roots, etc. They were trees with dichotomously branching stems showing evidences of secondary growth in thickness like those of modern dicotyledons; they are found from the Lower Devonian throughout the Carboniferous. — lep'i-do-den-dra'ceous (-shŭs), a.

lep'i-do-den'droid (-dĕn'droid), a. Paleobot. Pert. to, or resembling, Lepidodendron or allies. — n. A lepidodendrid.

Lep'i-do-den'dron (-drŏn), n. [NL; lepido- + Gr. δένδρον a tree.] Paleobot. A genus of fossil trees typifying the family Lepidodendraceæ, distinguished by the prominent rhomboidal leaf scars arranged quincuncially on the stem. The leaves were slender or subulate, closely set like those of modern club mosses, which these plants also resembled in their fructification (see LEPIDOSTROBUS). The numerous species of this genus contributed largely to the formation of coal.

Portion of surface of Lepidodendron (L. modulatum). Reduced lep'i-do-lite (lĕp'ĭ-dŏ-līt), n. [lepido- + -lite.] Min. A species of mica containing lithia. It usually occurs in lilac or rose-colored masses consisting of small scales. H., 2.5–4. Sp. gr., 2.8–2.9. See MICA.

lep'i-do-me-lane' (-mē-lān'), n. [lepido- + Gr. μελας, gen. μέλανος, black.] Min. A variety of mica, resembling biotite, but containing much ferric iron. See MICA.

lep'i-do-phyte' (lĕp'ĭ-dŏ-fīt'), n. [lepido- + -phyte.] Paleobot. Any Paleozoic fern or fern ally. — lep'i-do-phyt'ic (-fĭt'ĭk), a.

Lep'i-dop'ter-a (-dŏp'tĕr-ȧ), n. pl. [NL.; lepido- + Gr. πτερόν a feather, wing.] The order of insects which consists of the butterflies and moths. The Lepidoptera when adult have four broad wings which are usually entirely covered with minute, overlapping, often brightly colored scales. The females of a few forms are wingless. Except in a few genera there is a long, tubular proboscis composed of the maxillæ, and usually capable of being coiled spirally between the labial palpi. The mandibles are wanting or very rudimentary in the adult insects, and they usually feed chiefly on the nectar of flowers, but the wormlike larvæ, commonly called caterpillars, have well-developed mandibles and feed chiefly on leaves (very rarely on animal matter), many of them doing great damage to vegetation. The metamorphosis is complete. The pupas are usually completely obtected, and are frequently inclosed in a cocoon composed partly of silk secreted by glands opening on the head. The order is a very large one. Probably 50,000 species have been described. — lep'i-dop'ter-al (-ăl), a. — lep'i-dop'ter-an (-ăn), a & n.

lep'i-dop'ter-ous (-ŭs), a. Zool. Of or pertaining to the Lepidoptera.

Lep'i-do-si'ren (-dŏ-sī'rĕn), n. [lepido- + Gr. σειρήν a siren.] Zoöl. A genus of dipnoan fishes containing only one species (Lepidosiren paradoxa), inhabiting the swamps of the Amazon and its tributaries; also [l. c.], the fish itself. With the mudfishes of Africa, genus Protopterus (the species of which are sometimes loosely called lepidosirens), it constitutes the family Lep'i-do-si-ren'i-dæ (-sī-rĕn'ĭ-dē). The lepidosiren is eel-shaped, has a short, blunt head, long, tapering, and laterally compressed strong tail, and slender paired fins. It is covered with smooth skin inclosing small cycloid scales, and reaches a length of three feet. — lep'i-do-si'ren-oid (-sī'rĕn-oid), a. & n.

Lep'i-dos'te-i (-dŏs'tē-ī), n. pl. [NL.; lepido- + Gr. ὀστέον bone.] Zool. & Paleon A group of ganoid fishes including the Lepisosteidæ and several related extinct families. — lep'i-dos'te-oid (-oid), a. & n.

Lep'i-dos'tro-bus (-dŏs'trŏ-bŭs), n. [NL.; lepido- + Gr. στρόβος a twisting round.] Paleobot A conelike fossil described originally as a genus, but now held to represent the fructification of Lepidodendron. It consists of a large cluster of spirally arranged imbricated sporophylls.

lep'i-dote (lĕp'ĭ-dōt), a. [Gr. λεπιδωτός covered with scales, fr. λεπίς, -ίδος, a scale.] Bot. Covered with scurfy scales, as the leaves of the oleaster.

Lep'i-do'tes (-dō'tēz), n. [NL. See LEPIDOTE.] Paleon. A genus of extinct Mesozoic fishes of the group Lepidostei, having a somewhat fusiform body, large blunt teeth, and thick rhombic scales. Lep'i-do'tus (-tŭs) is a synonym. The genus is the type of a family, Lep'i-dot'i-dæ (-dŏt'ĭ-dē).

Le-pi'o-ta (lē-pī'ŏ-tȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λέπιον, dim. of λεπίς scale.] Bot. A genus of widely distributed agaricaceous fungi having white spores, a prominent annulus on the stipe, and free gills; — sometimes called parasol mushrooms, from the flat expanded pileus. Several species, as L. procera, are edible; others, as L. morgani, are usually regarded as poisonous. Also [l. c.], a fungus of this genus.

Le-pis'ma (lē-pĭz'mȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λέπισμα peel, fr. λεπίς, -ίδος, a scale.] Zoöl. A genus of wingless insects of the group Thysanura having an elongated flattened body, covered with shining scales and terminated by seven unequal bristles. See FISH MOTH. It is the type of a family, Lep'is-mat'i-dæ (lĕp'ĭs-măt'ĭ-dē), syn. Le-pis'mi-dæ (lē-pĭz'mĭ-dē). Cf. FIREBRAT. — le-pis'moid (-moid), a.

Lepisma (L. saccharina). Enlarged.

Le-por'i-dæ (lē-pŏr'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; L. lepus, leporis, hare + -idæ.] Zoöl. The family consisting of the hares and rabbits. With the pikas (Ochotonidæ) it constitutes the order Duplicidentata.

lep'o-ri-form' (lĕp'ŏ-rĭ-fôrm'), a. [L lepus, leporis, hare + -form.] Like a hare in form.

lep'o-rine (-rĭn; -rīn), a. [L. leporinus, fr. lepus, leporis, hare. See LEVERET.] Of, like, or pertaining to, a hare.

lep'o-spon'dy-lous (-spŏn'dĭ-lŭs), a. [Gr λέπος a scale, husk + σπόνδυλος, σφόνδυλος, vertebra.] Paleon. Designating, or having, vertebræ each consisting of a cylinder of bone (hourglass-shaped in longitudinal section) inclosing the notochord. The condition obtains in a number of amphibians and gives name to a group, the Aistopoda and certain small salamander-like forms.

lep'o-thrix (lĕp'ŏ-thrĭks), n. [NL.; Gr. λέπος a scale, husk + θρίξ hair.] Med. A bacterial affection in which the hairs of the axilla and scrotum are beaded, dry, and scaly.

lep'ra (lĕp'rȧ; lē'prȧ), n [L. See LEPER.] Med. Leprosy; — formerly any of various skin diseases, the leprosy of modern authors being lepra arabum. See LEPROSY.

Le-pra'li-a (lē-prā'lĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λεπρός scaly.] Zoöl. A genus of cheilostomatous polyzoans. They form a broad, flattened colony, which in L. foliacea, a European species, may reach a circumference of several feet. — le-pra'li-an (-ăn), a.

lep'ric (lĕp'rĭk), a. [Gr. λεπρικός, fr. λέπρα leprosy.] Med. Pertaining to, or affected with, lepra.

lep'rose (-rōs), a. [See LEPROUS.] Nat. Hist. Covered with thin, scurfy scales.

lep'ro-sied (lĕp'rō-sĭd), a. Med. Affected with leprosy.

lep'ro-sy (-sĭ), n. [See LEPROUS.] Med. A chronic endemic infectious disease caused by a specific microorganism, Bacillus lepræ, and characterized by the formation of tubercular nodules, ulcerations, and disturbances of sensation; lepra. It is with rare exceptions fatal. Two main varieties are distinguished, the tubercular or nodular leprosy and the anæsthetic leprosy. The former is characterized by the appearance of small red areas on the skin, which later become pigmented and develop into tubercles. The disease also affects the mucous membranes of the mouth, throat, and larynx. In addition there may be falling out of the hair and nails, and distortion of the hands and feet with destruction of the bones and joints. When the disease is fully developed the face assumes the characteristic leonine look from thickening of the skin. The anæsthetic variety, the most common tropical form, is marked by degeneration of the peripheral nerves, resulting at first in hyperæsthesia, followed soon by complete loss of sensation. Among the ancients, leprosy appears to have been a generic name for many varieties of skin disease (including the modern leprosy, psoriasis, etc.), some of which, among the Hebrews, rendered a person ceremonially unclean. A variety of leprosy of the Hebrews (probably identical with modern leprosy) was characterized by the presence of smooth, shining, depressed white patches or scales, the hair on which participated in the whiteness, while the skin and adjacent flesh became insensible. It was an incurable disease.

lep'rous (-rŭs), a. [OF. leprous, lepros, F. lépreux, fr. L. leprosus, fr. lepra, leprae, leprosy. See LEPER.] 1. Infected with leprosy; pertaining to or resembling leprosy; also, Obs., causing or inducing leprosy.

2. Nat. Hist. Leprose.

— lep'rous-ly, adv. — lep'rous-ness, n.

-lep'sy (-lĕp'sĭ), -lep'si-a (-lĕp'sĭ-ȧ). [NL. -lepsia, Gr. -λημψία, as in ἐπιλημψία epilepsy.] Suffixes denoting a seizing, esp. in medicine a violent or paroxysmal attack; as, andro-lepsy, epi-lepsy, methi-lepsia, etc.

Lep-tam'ni-um (lĕp-tăm'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; lepto- + Gr., ἀμνίον a covering membrane.] Bot. A monotypic genus of Pharaoh said, I will let you go Ex. viii 28.

5. To make escape, as a fluid or sound; to discharge (a gun); — now chiefly Obs. or Dial., except in to let blood, to bleed.
6. To allow to be used or occupied for a compensation; to lease; to rent; to hire out; also, to give or assign, as a work or contract; — often with out; as, to let a farm; to let a house; to let out horses; to let the building of a bridge; to let out the lathing and the plastering.
☞ The active infinitive of let, as of many other English verbs, is often apparently used in a passive sense; as, a house to let (i. e., for letting, or to be let). This form of expression conforms to the use of the Anglo-Saxon dative infinitive (see INFINITIVE), which was commonly so employed. "Your elegant house in Harley Street is to let." Thackeray. The imperative let is often used before a noun or pronoun to form an imperative of the 1st and 3d person; as, "Let the earth rejoice." "Rise up, let us go." Mark xiv. 42. "Let us seek out some desolate shade." Shak.

Syn. — LET, LEAVE. The use of LEAVE for LET in such phrases as "to leave (one) be," "to leave go (of)," is contrary to good usage.
let a-be, let be; let alone. Scot. — to l. alone. a Literally, to leave alone. b To withdraw from; to refrain from interfering with. "Let me alone in choosing of my wife." Chaucer. The imperative has the following colloquial uses: (1) Let (me, him, etc.) alone to (do something), trust (me) to (do it). (2) Let alone, not to mention; as, he could n't hit a barn, let alone a target. — to l. be, to leave untouched or without meddling with; to let alone. Specif., in the imperative: Let be, let alone; also, leave off; leave out of consideration; omit. "Let be therefore, my vengeance to dissuade." Spenser. — to l bygones be bygones, to let the past be forgotten. — to l daylight into one, to shoot or stab one. Slang. — to l. down. a To lower. b To soften in tempering; as, to let down tools, cutlery, and the like c The passive, to be let down, is said of a horse with a broken sinew. Far. — to l. down the bars, to remove a restriction or barrier. — to l. drive, to aim a blow; to strike with force; to discharge with violence, as an arrow, or stone. "Four rogues in buckram let drive at me." Shak. — to l. fly. a To throw or drive with violence; to discharge, as an arrow. b Naut. To let go suddenly and entirely (sheets of a sail). — to l. go by. See go by, under GO, v. i. — to l. (one) have (one's) head. See to give (one) the head, under GIVE, v. t. — to l. in or into. a To permit or suffer to enter; to admit. b To insert, or embed, as a piece of wood, in a recess formed in a surface for the purpose. c To cheat; deceive. — to l. loose, to remove restraint from; to permit to wander at large. — to l. off. a To discharge, to let fly, as a gun. b To release, as from an engagement or obligation. Colloq. — to l. out. a To allow to go forth, as, to let out a prisoner. b To extend or loosen, as the folds of a garment; to enlarge; to suffer to run out, as a cord. c To lease; to give out for performance by contract, as a job. d To divulge. — to l. run, Naut., to allow to pass or move freely, to slacken or loosen. — to l. slide, to let go; to cease to care for. Colloq. "Let the world slide." Shak. — to l. slip, to loose from the slip or noose, as a hound; to allow to escape.
Cry, "Havoc," and let slip the dogs of war Shak.
— to l. the cat out of the bag, to tell a secret, carelessly or willfully. Colloq.
☞ Other phrases with let, esp. as a variable part, are entered under their respective nouns, adjectives, etc.

let (lĕt), v. t. 1. To omit; to forbear. Obs.
Lat not for nyce shame. Chaucer
2. To act or behave; as, she let as if asleep. Obs.

let'ter, n. [ME. lettre, F. lettre, OF. letre, fr. L. littera, litera, a letter; pl., an epistle, a writing, literature; orig. uncert. Cf. LITERAL.] 1. An alphabetic symbol; one of the characters used in writing or print to represent speech sounds. Letters are phonetic signs which have usually developed from earlier hieroglyphic signs by a long process of evolution (cf. ACROLOGY, ACROPHONY, ALPHABET). A letter may represent a simple sound, as do Eng. p, b, etc., any of a certain group of sounds, as do Eng. e, a, etc., or a compound sound (usually developed from a simple sound), as do Eng. j (= dzh), ī (= ai), etc., or it may be combined with other letters to represent sounds often different from those which either has separately, as in Eng. ph, ou, etc.
2. Something written or printed, specif.: a A written or printed communication of a direct or personal nature, whether addressed to an individual or to a body; a written message or an epistle; as, a business letter; a letter of recommendation; an open letter, that is, a letter addressed to an individual or a body, usually upon a public matter, which is meant and given out for publication. Hence, esp., a written communication, usually sealed, such as those forming the main body of the first class of mail matter; — often distinguished from a postal or post card; as, letter postage, that is, the postal rate for mail of this class. The plural was formerly used in the singular sense, and still remains in use in many phrases, as letters missive, letters of administration, etc. (see below). b Rom. & Civil Law. A rescript replying to a magistrate. See RESCRIPT. c Usually pl. Literature; belles-lettres; hence, learning; erudition; as, a man of letters; the republic of letters, that is, the body of educated people. Cf. BELLES-LETTRES. d A writing; an inscription; pl., writings; records. Obs.

Chem.* a A white, crystalline, nitrogenous substance formed in the decomposition of albuminous matter by pancreatic digestion, by the action of boiling dilute sulphuric acid, and by putrefaction. It is also found as a constituent of various tissues and organs, as the spleen, pancreas, etc., and likewise in plants. Chemically, leucine is an amino acid, $C_6H_{10}(NH_2)CO_2H$ (α-amino-isobutyl-acetic acid, occurring in three optically different modifications). b By extension, any amino acid corresponding to the general formula $C_nH_{2n+1}O_2N$.

leu'ci-nu'ri-a (lū'sĭ-nū'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; leucine + -uria.] Med. The presence of leucine in the urine, occurring in certain specific fevers.

Leu-cis'cus (lū-sĭs'kŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λευκίσκος the white mullet.] Zool. A genus of cyprinoid fishes including numerous American, European, and Asiatic species known as dace, chub, minnows, shiners, etc., most of them of small size. It is sometimes the type of a subfamily, Leu'cis-ci'næ (lū'sĭ-sī'nē). — leu-cis'ci-form (lū-sĭs'ĭ-fôrm), a. — leu-cis'cine (-ĭn; -īn), a. & n.

leu'cite (lū'sīt), n. [Gr λευκός white: cf. F. leucite, G. leucit, earlier leuzit.] 1. Min. A white or gray mineral, usually in trapezohedral crystals with a glassy fracture, found in igneous rocks, esp. recent lavas. It is a silicate of potassium and aluminium, $KAl(SiO_3)_2$, and below 500° C. is pseudo-isometric. H., 5.5–6. Sp. gr., 2.45–2.50.

2. Bot. A leucoplast.

leucite basalt. Petrog. A basaltic rock composed of leucite, augite, and olivine with some magnetite.

leu-cit'ic (lū-sĭt'ĭk), a. Pert. to, or containing, leucite.

leu'ci-toid (lū'sĭ-toid), n. [leucite + -oid.] Cryst. The trapezohedron or tetragonal trisoctahedron; — sometimes called leucitohedron. Leucite usually occurs in this form.

leu'co- (lū'kō-), leuc-. [Gr. λευκός white.] Combining form signifying white, colorless; specif., Chem., denoting an extensive series of colorless organic compounds, got by reduction from certain colored compounds; as, *leuc*aniline, *leuc*aurine, etc. Also used adjectively; as, leuco base.

Leu-cob'ry-um (lū-kŏb'rĭ-ŭm; lū'kō-brĭ'ŭm), n. [NL.; leuco- + Gr. βρύον moss.] Bot. A genus of dicranaceous mosses with tufted habit and peculiar leaves, consisting entirely of the costa. L. glaucum, the white moss, the most common species, forms dense grayish white cushions in woods.

leu'co-crat'ic (-krăt'ĭk), a. [leuco- + Gr. κρατεῖν to rule.] Petrog. Designating the feldspathic dikes, sheets, etc., usually of a light color, which accompany large abyssal intrusions of igneous rock. They are held to have been derived from the magma of the latter by differentiation. Cf. MELANOCRATIC. See also COMPLEMENTARY.

Leu-coc'rĭ-num (lū-kŏk'rĭ-nŭm; lū'kō-krī'nŭm), n. [NL.; leuco- + Gr. κρίνον lily.] Bot. A genus of liliaceous plants of the western United States. The only species, L. montanum, the sand lily, is a low acaulescent herb having a short rootstock, leaves resembling those of a crocus, and large white umbellate flowers with a salver-shaped perianth. It is said to be poisonous to stock.

leu'co-cyte (lū'kō-sīt), n. [leuco- + -cyte.] Anat. A white or colorless blood corpuscle; one of the nucleated amœbalike cells capable of change of shape and locomotion which occur in the blood (see BLOOD). In man they are mostly between $\frac{1}{2500}$ and $\frac{1}{3500}$ of an inch in diameter, though many are considerably smaller, and their normal number is usually stated at 10,000 to 12,000 to the cubic millimeter of blood, but is subject to much variation, and in certain diseases (notably in leucocythæmia) it may be greatly increased. Several varieties (see POLYMORPHONUCLEAR, EOSINOPHILE, LYMPHOCYTE, etc.) are present in healthy blood in fairly constant proportions. Some of these forms are probably stages in the development of the cells. A large proportion of the leucocytes undoubtedly originate as lymph cells in the spleen and lymphatic tissues and pass into the blood from the thoracic duct. They are not confined to blood and lymph, but make their way by their own movements through most of the soft tissues of the body. In these situations various names have been applied to them (as wandering cell, phagocyte). Leucocytes are considered to play an important part in the coagulation of the blood. They consume degenerating tissue in the case of retrogressive changes, and also destroy foreign bodies in the tissues, including disease germs and other bacteria.

leu'co-cy-thæ'mi-a } (lū'kō-sī-thē'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; leuco- leu'co-cy-the'mi-a } + -cyte + -hæmia (see -ÆMIA).] Med. A disease in which the white corpuscles of the blood are largely increased in number, with enlargement of the spleen or the lymphatic glands, and with pathologic changes in the bone marrow. It is due mainly to derangement of the blood-making organs, esp. the spleen, and is attended with progressive anæmia and a tendency to hemorrhage. — leu'co-cy-thæ'mic, -the'mic (mĭk), a.

leu'co-cyt'ic (-sĭt'ĭk), a. Physiol. & Med. Of or pertaining to leucocytes; characterized by an excess of leucocytes.

leu'co-cy'to-pen'ic (-sī'tō-pĕn'ĭk), a. [leucocyte + Gr. πένης poor.] Physiol. Of, pert. to, or designating, a phase of the blood in which the leucocytes are reduced in number. The phase may be induced by injection of any of many substances, and is usually followed by leucocytosis.

leu'co-cy-to'sis (-sī-tō'sĭs), n. [NL.; leucocyte + -osis.] Physiol. & Med. An increase in the number of leucocytes in the blood. It may be induced by the injection of any of certain substances, as peptones or nucleins, or may result from certain pathological conditions. Cf. LEUCOCYTOPENIC. — leu'co-cy-tot'ic (-tŏt'ĭk), a.

leu'co-cy-tu'ri-a (-tū'rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; leucocyte + -uria.] Med. The presence of leucocytes in the urine.

leu'co-der'ma (-dûr'mȧ) } n. [NL. See LEUCO-; -DERM.]
leu'co-der'mi-a (-mĭ-ȧ) } Med. Abnormal whiteness of the skin in spots, due to absence or deficiency of the pigment. — leu'co-der'mic (-mĭk), a.

Leu-co'jum (lū-kō'jŭm), n. [Gr. λευκόϊον; λευκός white + ἴον violet.] Bot. A genus of bulbous amaryllidaceous plants, the snowflakes, natives of the Old World, characterized by the regular perianth and long filaments of the stamens. See SNOWFLAKE.

leu-co'ma (-mȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λεύκωμα, fr. λευκός white.] Med. A white opacity in the cornea of the eye, usually produced by inflammation or ulceration; albugo.

leu-co'ma-ine (-mȧ-ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. Also -in. [leuco- + -maine, as in ptomaine.] Physiol. Chem. Any basic substance normally produced in the living animal body as a decomposition product of proteid matter, as distinguished from alkaloid, ptomaine, and toxine.

leu'co-mel'a-nous (lū'kō-mĕl'ȧ-nŭs), a. [leuco- + Gr.

leu-col'y-sis (lū-kŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; leuco- + -lysis.] Med. Decomposition of white blood corpuscles. — leu'co-lyt'ic (lū'kō-lĭt'ĭk), a.

μέλας, -ανος, black.] Of a fair complexion with dark hair or dark hair and eyes leu'con (lū'kŏn), n.; pl. LEUCONES (lū-kō'nēz). [NL., fr. Gr. λευκός white.] Zool. A type of calcareous sponge in which the choanocytes are limited to saclike cavities in the much thickened mesoderm and communicate with the exterior and the cloaca by branching canal systems. The genus Leu-cet'ta (lū-sĕt'ă) and its allies are examples.

leu-con'ic (lū-kŏn'ĭk), a. [leuco- + croconic.] Org. Chem. Pertaining to or designating an acid, $(CO)_5{\cdot}4H_2O$, obtained by the oxidation of croconic acid. It crystallizes in small colorless needles, and has a sweet taste.

leu'co-pe'ni-a (lū'kō-pē'nĭ-ă), n. [NL.; leuco- + Gr. πενία poverty.] Med. Leucocytopenic condition; hypoleucocytosis. —leu'co-pen'ic (-pĕn'ĭk), a.

leu'co-pla'ki-a (-plā'kĭ-ă), n. [NL.; leuco- + Gr. πλάξ, πλακός, anything flat.] Med. Diseased condition marked by the formation of white patches upon a surface, esp. upon the buccal mucous membrane and the tongue.

leu'co-plast (lū'kō-plăst), n. [leuco- + -plast.] Bot. One of the colorless plastids in the cytoplasm of plants in the interior of tissues where light cannot penetrate, as in tubers, roots, etc. They serve as nuclei for starch grains, which are built up in successive layers on them. Exposure to light converts them into chloroplasts.

leu'cor-rhe'a } (lū'kŏ-rē'ă), n. [leuco- + -rhea.] Med. A leu'cor-rhœ'a } discharge of a white, yellowish, or greenish, viscid mucus, resulting from inflammation or congestion of the membrane lining the genital organs of the female; the whites. —leu'cor-rhe'al, -rhœ'al (-ăl), a.

leu-co'sis (lū-kō'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λεύκωσις whiteness.] Med. Abnormal whitening, as of the skin or cornea.

Leu-coth'o-ë (lū-kŏth'ō-ē), n. [L.] 1. Class. Myth. Daughter of Orchamus, king of Babylon She is fabled to have been changed by Apollo into an incense shrub.

2. Bot. A large genus of American and Asiatic ericaceous shrubs, having white bell-shaped flowers, borne in terminal and axillary one-sided racemes. The corolla is 5-lobed, the anther sacs dehiscent by terminal pores, and the capsule 5-valved. Five species occur in the eastern United States, several being ornamental. The heritage contains a poisonous substance similar to that found in Kalmia. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

lev (lĕf), n.; pl. LEVA (lĕ'vȧ). Also lew (lĕf). [Bulgarian lew. Cf. LEU.] The gold monetary unit of Bulgaria, worth 19.3 cents; also, a silver coin. Cf. LEU; see COIN.

Le-vant' (lē-vănt'), n. [It. levante the point where the sun rises, the east, the Levant, fr. levare to raise, levarsi to rise, L. levare to raise: prob. through F. levant. See LEVER]

1. The East; the Orient. Obs. except, specif., the countries washed by the eastern part of the Mediterranean and its contiguous waters.

2. [l. c.] A levanter (the wind so called).

3. [l. c.] Levant morocco.

Le-vant' (lē-vănt'; in earlier senses also lĕv'ănt), a. [Often l. c.] Of or pertaining to the Orient; Oriental; East; east; eastern. Obs. or Archaic, except with reference to the Mediterranean Levant.

Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds. Milton.

Levant Company, an English trading company first chartered by Elizabeth in 1581. Its second charter, granted by James I in 1605, as confirmed by Charles II. and supplemented by statutes and usage, formed the basis of British consular jurisdiction in the East until the company's dissolution in 1825. —L. dollar, an Austrian silver coin. See DOLLAR, 8. —L. morocco, a large-grained variety of morocco leather, highly prized for bookbinding. It was originally obtained from the Levant. —L. soaproot, a silenaceous herb (Gypsophila struthium) the root of which possesses detergent properties. —L. wormseed, the buds of a European species of wormwood (Artemisia pauciflora) used as an anthelmintic; also, the plant itself.

lev'ant (lĕv'ănt), n. [F., p. pr. of lever to raise.] Law. Used only in the phrase levant and couchant, lit., rising up and lying down; — said of trespassing beasts, and indicating that they have been long enough on land to lie down and rise up to feed, — such time being held to include a day and night at the least.

Le-vant'er (lē-văn'tẽr), n. [From LEVANT, n.] 1. One living in, or a ship trading with, the Levant. Rare.

2. [Usually l. c.] A strong easterly wind peculiar to the Mediterranean.

6. A line or surface that cuts perpendicularly all plumb lines that it meets, and hence would everywhere coincide with a surface of still water. This is strictly the geoid, or true level, but commonly the tangent plane at any point of this geoid is meant, or the plane of the horizon, or a line in it, called accordingly the apparent level.

7. An open stretch of water in a canal, river, etc., as between two canal locks.

8. Mining. a A horizontal passage in a mine, intended for regular working and transportation. Cf. ADIT. b The horizontal plane containing a main level and other workings, as crosscuts, drifts, etc.; as, the 4th level; the 700-foot level. c A gutter for carrying away water.

9. A state of equality; as, to play an opponent to a level in a match. Colloq.

10. Act of leveling, or aiming, a missile weapon; also, the mark aimed at; hence, aim; purpose. Obs.

Shot from the deadly level of a gun. Shak.

level of the sea. = SEA LEVEL. —on the level, on a basis of even-handed justice; honestly; fairly.

lev'el (lĕv'ĕl), a. 1. Having no part higher than another; having, or conforming to, the curvature of the undisturbed liquid parts of the earth's surface; as, a level field; level ground.

2. Coinciding or parallel with the plane of the horizon; horizontal; as, the telescope is now level.

3. Physics. Perpendicular to all lines of force in a field of force, so that no energy is transformed in moving a mass along it; equipotential.

4. Of the same rank, grade, condition, or the like; equal; even; specif.: a Even with anything else; of the same height; on the same line or plane; on the same footing; of equal importance; — followed by with, sometimes by to.

Young boys and girls
Are level now with men; the odds is gone Shak.
Everything lies level to our wish. Shak.

b Sports. On equal conditions; without handicap; as, a level event or race. c Phon. Of even tone or stress; without rising or falling inflection or accent.

A kind of level whine R. Browning.

d Dyeing. Even; evenly distributed; as, a level color.

5. Well balanced; just; steady; impartial; as, a level head or understanding. Colloq. "A level consideration." Shak.

6. Straightforward; direct; clear; open.

A very plain and level account. M. Arnold.

Syn. — LEVEL, FLAT, EVEN, SMOOTH are here compared esp. as applying to surfaces. That is LEVEL which is without inclination; FLAT emphasizes rather the absence of marked curvature, prominences, or depressions, and often implies monotony (see INSIPID); as, level as a floor, as a railroad track; the flat surface of a table, flat and uninteresting country. EVEN suggests esp. uniformity; SMOOTH (see SMOOTH) implies such evenness as is without appreciable break to sight or touch; a surface may be either even or smoot without being level or flat; as, the even top of a well-trimmed hedge, smooth as a mirror. See EQUABLE.

level bearin 1. course. Mining. = STRIKE, n, 6.—1. crossing, a grad crossing. Eng.—1. line, Shipbuilding, the outline of a ship made by the intersection of a ship's outside with any horizontal plane. —1. premium. See PREMIUM.

lev'el (lĕv'ĕl), adv. In a straight or level line; directly.

lev'el, v. t.; LEV'ELED (-ĕld) or LEV'ELLED; LEV'EL-ING or LEV'EL-LING. 1. To make level; to make horizontal; to bring the condition of a level line or surface; hence, to make flat even; as, to level a road, a walk, or a garden.

2 To bring to a horizontal position, as a gun; hence, to point in taking aim; as, to level a crossbow.

3. Hence, ' aim or direct; as, to level one's gaze or remarks at a certain person.

For all his mind on honor fixed is,
To which he levels all his purposes. Spenser.

4. To bring to a common level or plane, esp. in respect of rank, condition, character, privilege, etc.; as, to level all the ranks and conditions of men; also, to bring to a level with; as, to level a slave with his master; to level one's remarks with the capacity of one's hearers.

5. To bring to a lower level; to overthrow; to topple down; to reduce to a flat surface; to lower.

And their proud structures level with the ground. Sandys

6. Surv. To find the heights of different points in (a piece of land), as with a surveyor's level; to make a contour of by means of a level; — sometimes with over, up.

7. To make even, equal, or uniform, as in color; specif., Philol., to bring into the same class, as word forms, etc.

lev'el, v. i. 1. To be level; to be on a level with something; hence, to accord; agree; suit. Obs.

With such accommodation and besort
As levels with her breeding. Shak.

2. To aim a gun, spear, etc., horizontally; hence, to aim or point a weapon in direct line with the mark; fig., to direct the eye, mind, or effort directly to an object.

She leveled at our purposes. Shak.

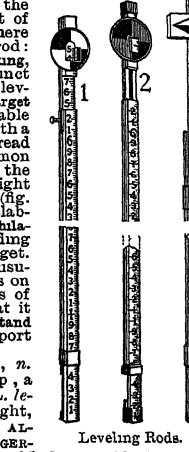
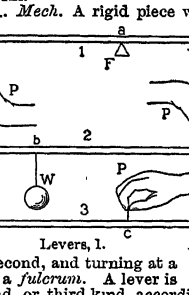
leveling, or levelling, instrument. = SURVEYOR'S LEVEL.—1. pole. = LEVELING ROD.—1. rod or staff, Surv., a graduated rod used in measuring the distance between points on the ground and the line of sight of a leveling instrument. There are two general types of rod: the self-reading, or speaking, rod, with graduations distinct enough to be read from the leveling instrument, and the target rod, which has an adjustable target generally provided with a vernier and is adjusted and read by the rodman. Three common American forms of rod are the Boston rod (fig. 3), a form of light target rod, the New York rod (fig. 2), a somewhat heavier, more elaborate target rod, and the Philadelphia rod (fig. 1), a self-reading rod, also provided with a target. —1. screw, any of a number (usually three or four) of screws on which a support or stand, as of an instrument, rests so that it can be leveled by them.—1. stand or support, a stand or support resting on leveling screws.



Leveling Rods.

le'ver (lē'vẽr; lĕv'ẽr; 277), n. [ME. levour, OF. leveor, prop, a lifter, fr. F. lever to raise, L. levare; akin to levis light in weight, E. levity: cf. F. levier. Cf. ALLEVIATE, ELEVATE, LEAVEN, LEGERDEMAIN, LEVEE, LEVY, n.] 1. Mech. A rigid piece which is capable of turning about one point, or axis (the fulcrum), and in which are two or more other points where forces are applied;—used for transmitting and modifying force and motion. Specif., a bar of metal, wood, or other rigid substance, used to exert a pressure, or sustain a weight, at one point of its length, by the application of a force at a second, and turning at a third on a fixed point called a fulcrum. A lever is said to be of the first, second, or third kind, according as either the fulcrum, F, the weight, W, or the power, P, is situated between the other two, as in the figures. In all cases the two arms of the lever (ac and ab respectively in the Illust.) are the distances from the fulcrum to the power and to the weight, and the principle of the lever is that, when the lever is in equilibrium, the power and weight are to each other inversely as their respective arms.



Levers, 1.

2. Mach. a A bar, as a capstan bar, applied to a rotatory piece to turn it. b An arm on a rockshaft, to give motion to the shaft or to obtain motion from it. c A starting bar in an engine. d A piece to open or close the barrel of a breech-loading firearm.

3. Arch. A naturally cambered timber forming one of the couples of principals of a roof.

4. Locksmithing. A lever tumbler; also, erron., a tumbler.

5. Either of the branches of a horse's bit.

le'ver, v. t.; LE'VERED (lē'vẽrd; lĕv'ẽrd); LE'VER-ING. 1. To prize, or pry, up, raise, move, etc., with a lever;—often with over, up, etc.

2. To force into a given position with a lever.

le'ver, v. i. To use, or work with, a lever.

le'ver-age (lē'vẽr-ĕj; lĕv'ẽr-ĕj; 277), n. The action of a lever, or the mechanical advantage gained by the lever; also, an arrangement or system of levers.

leverage of a couple, Mech., the perpendicular distance between the lines of action of the two forces.—1. of a force, Mech., the perpendicular distance from the line in which a force acts upon a body to a point about which the body turns or tends to turn.

lever boarding. a Louver boarding, esp. when movable as in ordinary window blinds, this latter being a recent modification. b Any boarding laid overlapping, like louver boards or clapboards.

lever crank. Mech. A jointed four-bar mechanism with one link fixed and one side link shorter than the other, so that while the former turns through a complete revolution the latter merely performs a double oscillation through a definite angle;—called also lever-crank chain.

lever drill. Mach. A small vertical drilling machine in which the drill spindle has a feather key along its length so that it can be advanced toward the work by means of a lever. Colloquially called chip-potato machine, from its resemblance to a machine for chipping potatoes. Eng.

lev'er-et (lĕv'ẽr-ĕt), n. [Dim. of F. lièvre hare; cf. F. levraut, dim. of lièvre hare, L. lepus. Cf. LEPORINE.] 1. A hare in its first year.

2. A woman paramour, or mistress. Obs.

lever watch. A watch having a vibrating lever to connect the action of the escape wheel with that of the balance.

lev'i-a-ble (lĕv'ĭ-ă-b'l), a. [From LEVY to assess.] Capable of assessment and collection; that may be levied, as a duty; also, that may be levied upon, as goods.

le-vi'a-than (lē-vī'ă-thăn), n. [L. (Vulgate), fr. Heb. livyāthān.] 1. An aquatic animal or animals mentioned in several places (Job xli. 1–8; Ps. lxxiv. 14; Ps. civ. 26; Job iii. 8 (R.V. and A.V. margin); Is. xxvii. 1). The description and context are generally considered to indicate that Job xli. 1–8 and Ps. lxxiv. 14 refer to the crocodile; Ps. civ. 26, probably to the whale; and the other passages to the dragon popularly supposed to be invoked by enchanters to cause eclipses of sun or moon.

2. Hence, fig., something huge and formidable of its kind; —applied esp. to ships.

3. The political organism; the commonwealth, or the organized whole people of a state in their collective capacities;—introduced by Thomas Hobbes (1588–1679) in his treatise on the state entitled "Leviathan" (1651).

Leviathan of Literature, Dr. Samuel Johnson (1709–84).

leviathan canvas. A kind of coarse open canvas used in worsted work.

Leviathan Stitch.

leviathan wool. A soft, many-stranded wool used on leviathan canvas.

lev'i-ga-ble (lĕv'ĭ-gă-b'l), a. [See LEVIGATE, v. t.] Capable of being levigated.

lev'i-gate (-gāt), v. t.; -GAT'ED (-gāt'-ĕd); -GAT'ING (-gāt'ĭng). [L. levigatus, p. p. of levigare to make smooth, fr. levis smooth; akin to Gr. λεῖος.] To make smooth, in various senses: a To free from grit; to reduce to a impalpable powder or paste. b To mix thoroughly, as liquids or semiliquids. c To polish. d To make smooth in action. "When use hath levigated the organs." Barrow. e Technically, to make smooth by grinding to fine powder while in a moist condition; sometimes, merely to stir with water so as to separate the finer particles from the coarser.

lev'i-ga'tion (-gā'shŭn), n. [L. levigatio a smoothing] Act or operation of levigating.

li'bel (lī'bĕl), n. [L. libellus a little book, pamphlet, libel, lampoon, dim. of liber the liber, or inner bark, of a tree; also (because the ancients wrote on this bark), paper, parchment, or a roll of any material used to write upon, and hence, a book or treatise: cf. F. libelle.] 1. A brief writing of any kind, esp. a declaration, bill, certificate, request, supplication, etc. Obs.
A libel of forsaking [divorcement]. Wycliffe (Matt. v. 31).
2. Any public defamatory writing, esp. in the form of a handbill, circular, or the like; a lampoon. Obs. or R.
3. Law. Any statement or representation, published without just cause or excuse, expressed either in print or in writing, or by pictures, effigies, or other signs, tending to expose another to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule; defamation of a person by means of written statements, pictures, or other visible signs; in a more extended sense, the publication of such writings, pictures, or the like, as are of a blasphemous, treasonable, seditious, or obscene character, also, the act, tort, or crime of publishing such a statement or representation. A libel upon a person is a tort, and as such is ground for a civil action for damages, when malicious it is a crime subject to indictment at common law. The truth of the libel, or the fact that it was a privileged communication, or fair comment (on public acts of public men), is a defense in a civil action; and by statute a proper apology is a defense in some jurisdictions in case of newspaper libels. In criminal prosecutions the truth of the libel is not a defense at common law, but is now by statute generally a defense in certain cases. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION, PUBLISH, SLANDER.
Libel is said to violate not only the right of an individual not to be defamed, but also the right of the state that no incentive shall be given to a breach of the peace. T. E. Holland.
4. Law. In Civil-law practice, and in that of admiralty and ecclesiastical courts, the written statement made by the plaintiff of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks. Cf. DECLARATION. In criminal cases in Scots law the libel is the part of the indictment, or formerly of the criminal letters, stating the grounds of the charge, and once, also, the punishment attached to the offense. The ecclesiastical use of libel and libelant for the complaint and the complainant in divorce proceedings is often used in the secular courts. Cf. LIBELLARY.
5. Loosely, any defamatory statement, in writing or oral; also, any representation or suggestion of a person or material or immaterial thing that conveys an unjustly unfavorable impression of him or it; as, the photograph is a libel on Miss X; this account of New York is a libel.

li'bel, v. t.; LI'BELED (-bĕld) or LI'BELLED; LI'BEL-ING or LI'BEL-LING. 1. To defame, or expose to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, by a writing, picture, sign, etc.; to make or publish a libel against.

A feminine Lĭb′er-a (lĭb′ẽr-ă) (see CERES) was associated with him, their festival, the Lĭb′er-a′li-a (-ā′lĭ-ă), falling on March 17.

lĭb′er-al (lĭb′ẽr-ăl), a. [F. libéral, L. liberalis, from liber free. Cf. DELIVER.] 1. Befitting, or worthy of, a man of free birth; free; not servile or mean; not restricted; esp., not narrowly restricted by pecuniary or utilitarian considerations; as, a liberal manner. "Liberal education." Macaulay. "The liberal arts." Shak.

2. Bestowing in a large and noble way, as a freeman; generous; bounteous; open-handed; as, a liberal giver. "Liberal of praise." Bacon.

3. Bestowed in a large way; hence, abundant; bountiful; ample; large; as, a liberal gift; a liberal discharge of matter, a liberal offer.

His wealth doth warrant a liberal dower. Shak.

4. Free from restraint; uncontrolled; hence, regardless of legal or moral restraints, licentious. Obs. or Archaic. "Most like a liberal villain." Shak.

5. Not strict or rigorous; not confined or restricted to the literal sense; free; as, a liberal translation of a classic, or a liberal construction of law or of language.

6. Not narrow or contracted in mind; broad-minded; catholic, free from bigotry.

7. Not bound by authority, orthodox tenets, or established forms in political or religious philosophy; independent in opinion; not conservative; inclined to welcome new ideas; friendly to suggestions, or experiments, of reform in the constitution or administration of government; often, specif., having tendency toward democratic or republican, as distinguished from monarchical or aristocratic, forms; as, liberal thinkers; liberal Christians; liberal ideas in politics; hence [cap.], adopted as the designation of political parties in some countries, notably England. In England the designation of Liberal was first applied in the first quarter of the 19th century to the more radical element in the Whig party, with an implication of reproach, but soon supplanted Whig both as adjective and noun, as, about 1830, Conservative supplanted Tory, the earlier names being reserved for the more conservative minority in each party. See CONSERVATIVE, a., 3, RADICAL, TORY, WHIG.

Respectable politicians usually lay claim to both names; thus a Conservative government "professes to pursue a truly liberal policy;" and a Liberal government assures us that its measures are "conservative in the best sense of the word." T. Raleigh

A cheerful Christian from the liberal fold. O. W. Holmes.

Syn. — LIBERAL, GENEROUS, BOUNTIFUL, MUNIFICENT. As applied to giving, LIBERAL suggests freedom or abundance, GENEROUS emphasizes the idea of warm-hearted readiness to give; as, a liberal (cf. a generous) provision for one's needs; a liberal offer, a generous portion. Liberal also suggests freedom from prejudice or narrowness; generous, magnanimity, esp. in judging; as, liberal opinions, liberal in one's religious views; a generous opponent; "He was the most generous man I have ever known; the most forward to praise what he thought good, the most willing to admire, the most free from all thought of himself in praising and admiring" (M. Arnold). BOUNTIFUL suggests abounding liberality; MUNIFICENT, splendid or princely generosity, as, "a worthy gentleman . . . as bountiful as mines of India" (Shak.); "Lady Bountiful" (Farquhar); a munificent endowment. See PLENTIFUL, PROFUSE.

liberal arts (artes liberales, the higher arts, which, among the Romans, only freemen were permitted to pursue), in the Middle Ages, the seven branches of learning, — grammar, logic, rhetoric, arithmetic, geometry, music, and astronomy. In modern times the liberal arts include the sciences, philosophy, history, etc., which compose the course of academical or collegiate education. Hence, degrees in the arts; master and bachelor of arts. — L. Conservative, a progressive member of the Conservative party. Hence, L. Conservatism. — L. Imperialism, a term used to designate their political principles by some English Liberals who are opposed to home rule for Ireland and who in general agree with the imperialistic views of the Conservatives. They do not form a recognized party. Hence, L. Imperialist. — L. party. See def. 7, above. — L. Republican party, U. S. Hist., a party composed of former Republicans not in accord with President Grant's first administration, who in 1872 nominated Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown for President and Vice President. These nominees were indorsed by the Democrats, but were defeated, receiving only 63 electoral votes to 286 for U. S. Grant and Henry Wilson, nominated by the Republicans. — L. Unionist, one of a large group of members of the Liberal party in England which in 1886 refused to follow the lead of Gladstone in the matter of home rule for Ireland. For a time the Liberal Union party had an independent organization, but later its members joined, or habitually acted with, the Conservatives. Hence, L. Unionism.

2. One of a group of thallophytic plants growing as epiphytes, on rocks, bark, etc. They have a flat or branching thallus, not differentiated into stem and leaf, but varying greatly in texture, being foliaceous, crustaceous, fruticose, or gelatinous (see these terms). A lichen is a composite organism, consisting of an ascomycetous (rarely basidiomycetous) fungus living symbiotically with an alga. The hyphæ of the fungus envelop the algal cells, called gonidia, and derive organized food materials from them; while the algæ are in turn protected from external injury or exposure. Lichens resemble ascomycetous fungi in their mode of sexual reproduction; they also develop soredia, or vegetative brood bodies. Before their structure was definitely ascertained they were ranked as a class coördinate with the Algæ and Fungi, but are now included among the latter. Many lichens are of commercial importance as furnishing dyes or articles of food. See ICELAND MOSS, REINDEER MOSS, ARCHIL, LITMUS, also GONIDIA, SYMBIOSIS.

> Lichens are perennial; they grow very slowly, but they attain an extreme age. Some species, grown on the primitive rocks of the highest mountain ranges in the world, are estimated to have attained an age of at least a thousand years. M. C. Cooke.

LEAGUE a union, LEAM a string, LEAMER, LIGAMENT.] Law. A legal claim ; a charge upon real or personal property for the satisfaction of some debt or duty ; a right in one to control or to hold and retain or enforce a charge against the property of another until some claim of the former is paid or satisfied. The common-law lien arises only in cases of possession of personal property, usually under a bailment, and confers only the right to retain the property until the claim is paid (though equity early afforded the relief of a foreclosure). It may be either for the satisfaction only of an obligation contracted in respect of the property itself (a particular, or specific, lien) or for the satisfaction of a balance due from the owner of the property to the lienor (general lien) not confined to the amount due in respect of the property itself. An equitable lien is one which is given effect in courts of equity, and arises usually constructively. It may be on real or personal property, and does not require possession of the property, being usually in effect a constructive trust, as in case of a vendor's lien, the lien of lis pendens, etc. A maritime lien, like the equitable lien, does not require possession of the property, and is enforced by a libel in admiralty, as the lien of sailors for wages on vessel and cargo. A statutory lien is given in certain cases by statutory provisions, as a mechanic's lien, for material (materialman's lien) or for labor supplied ; a judgment lien, arising on a judgment, usually only on filing of the judgment in the county where the real estate lies ; an agricultural lien, securing loans made on the strength of growing crops, etc.

lieutenant general. [Cf. F. lieutenant général.] An army officer in rank next below a general and next above a major general. In the United States, before the Civil War, this rank had been conferred only on George Washington and (in brevet) on Winfield Scott. In 1864 it was revived by Congress and conferred on Ulysses S. Grant, and subsequently, by promotion, on William T. Sherman and Philip H. Sheridan, each of whom was advanced to the rank of general of the army. When Sheridan was made general (in 1888) the rank of lieutenant general was suffered to lapse. In 1895 it was revived and conferred on John M. Schofield, but lapsed the same year. In 1901 it was again revived and conferred on Nelson A. Miles, and has since been conferred on S. B. M. Young, Adna R. Chaffee, John C. Bates, Henry C. Corbin, and Arthur MacArthur. In the United States army his insigma on shoulder straps are three silver embroidered stars. See SHOULDER STRAP, Illust.

life (līf), n ; pl. LIVES (līvz). [AS. līf ; akin to D. lijf body, G. leib body, MHG. lip life, body, OHG. līb life, Icel. līf, life, body, Sw. lif, Dan. liv, and E. live, v. See LIVE, v. i. ; cf. ALIVE.] 1. The quality or character which distinguishes an animal or a plant from inorganic or from dead organic bodies and which is especially manifested by metabolism, growth, reproduction, and internal powers of adaptation to environment, the property by which the organs of an animal or a plant, or the organism as a whole, are conceived as maintained in the performance of their functions, or the state in which all or any of the organs of a plant or animal are capable of performing all or any of their functions.

2. The state of that which is alive, or the fact of being a living being ; specif. a Exercise of vital activities ; animate existence, as, a matter of life and death, to bring to life. b A vital or living being ; esp., a person. c Living beings collectively or in the aggregate ; living organisms collectively ; as, marine life.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.

3. The quality or fact of animate existence conceived as a part of an animal's being or as a separable attribute of his body ; hence, the principle or force by which animals and plants are conceived as maintained in the performance of their organic functions ; the vital force, whether regarded as physical or spiritual, the presence of which distinguishes organic from inorganic matter. The animism universal among primitive peoples makes all matter living matter, that is, ascribes life to all things. It does not, therefore, distinguish a vital or organic form from an inorganic. This distinction is first made explicit in the doctrine of Plato and Aristotle that life is due to or represents the action of formal or form-giving causes upon plastic or passive matter (see CAUSE). The Scholastics advanced the conception of vital force as the unique principle of life, but this has not found favor with those who seek a mechanical explanation, and it cannot be (or has not been) properly aligned with the doctrine of physical force (see FORCE). Modern biologists, as a rule, define life by its effects, considering it as a form of organization explainable by mechanical or chemical principles, as embodying a growth force (see BATHMISM) ; as a directive, as opposed to an originative, force ; or as a property or capacity of adaptation to environment. In primitive thought the life is often identified with the breath or the blood, and is sometimes the same as, sometimes different from, the soul This sense survives in, or influences, many modern phrases. Cf. SOUL

But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, you shall not eat. Gen. ix. 4.

The warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope

4. Existence, esp. conscious existence, conceived as a quality of the soul or as the soul's nature and being ; as, spiritual life ; the immortal life of man ; also, the state of spiritual beatitude or felicity conceived as the natural destiny of the soul and distinguished from evil as a state of spiritual death.

She shows a body rather than a life. Shak.

5. The series of experiences, of body and mind, which make up the history of an animal from birth to death, or the cycle of development of a plant from germination to decay ; the totality of actions and occurrences constituting an individual experience ; as, his was a happy life.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together Shak.

6. Hence : a An individual human existence, or human existence personified ; as, each day of one's life.

Life 's but a walking shadow, a poor player
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage. Shak.

b A history of the acts and events of a life ; a biography ; as, Johnson wrote the life of Milton.

7. The duration of a life, whether considered as the total period from birth to death or as the period from a given date until death ; as, the average human life is forty years.

8. Way or manner of living with respect to conditions, circumstances, character, conduct, occupation, etc. ; hence, human affairs ; also, lives, considered collectively, as a distinct class or type ; as, low life ; the life of Indians, or of miners ; one's daily life.

9. In various transferred and figurative senses : a Something essential to life, whether spiritual or physical.

The words that I speak unto you . . . they are life. John vi 63.

b The living form or semblance ; as, a drawing from the life ; also, animation ; spirit ; — ascribed to works of art themselves; as, drawings characterized by life and vivacity.

That gives thy gestures grace and life. Wordsworth.

c That which imparts or excites spirit or vigor ; that upon which enjoyment or success depends ; as, he was the life of the company, or of the enterprise. d Something dear to one as one's existence ; a darling ; — used as a term of endearment. e The period of duration of anything that is conceived of as resembling a natural organism in structure or functions ; as, the life of a state, a machine, or a book. Specif., the period during which a material object is fit for use or during which it efficiently performs its functions ; — measured in actual time ; as, the life of an iron girder is 40 years ; or the number of times it may be used, as, the life of a gun barrel is 9,000 rounds. f The period during which a statute or other legal enactment is in force, as, the life of an execution, the period when an execution is in force. g The characteristic effectiveness or sound condition of an inanimate substance.

10. Sports & Games. a Pool. In some games, a point scored or one of a limited number of opportunities to score. b Cricket & Baseball. An opportunity given a batter to continue at bat by missing a chance to put him out, as by dropping a fly.

11 Insurance. The person whose life is insured. Cant for life. a For the term of one's life ; until death ; as, imprisonment for life ; a devise for life. b To save life or as if to save life ; as, to gallop for life. — L. and Advent Union. See ADVENTIST. — on life, or on live, alive ; living ; — also with other prepositions, as upon, at, of, in, to, in the same sense. In these phrases the form live (occasionally lives) is common. See ALIVE, etymol. ; cf. LIVE, a., LIVES. Obs. — to the l., with lifelike resemblance or fidelity to the subject ; as, the portrait was drawn to the life.

to lift at, to rise in, or stir up, hostility or opposition to. Obs. — to l., or l. up, the eyes, face, etc., to look up; to raise the eyes, as in prayer. Ps. cxxi. 1. — to l., or l. up, the hand. a To take an oath. Gen. xiv. 22. b To pray, implore, etc. c To make any effort; to engage in work. Colloq. — to l., or l. up, the hand against, to rebel against; to assault; attack; injure; oppress. Job xxxi. 21. — to l. up one's head, to feel renewed pride, self-respect, or energy. — to lift up the head of, to cause to be exalted or freed, to cause to rejoice. Gen. xl. 13. Luke xxi. 28. — to l. up the heel against, to treat with harshness or unkindness. John xiii. 18 — to l. up the voice, to cry aloud; to call out. Gen. xxi. 16.
lift (lĭft), v. i. 1. To try to raise something; to exert the strength for raising or bearing; as, you should avoid lifting.

> Strained by lifting at a weight too heavy Locke

2. To rise; to become or appear raised or elevated; as, the fog lifts; the land lifts to a ship approaching it; also, of clouds and, rarely, rain, to disappear or cease.
3. Naut. To shake slightly; — said of sails when the ship is so close to the wind that they will not stand full.
4. To warp, as a floor.
5. To practice theft. Spenser.
lift, n. 1. Act of lifting, or raising; as, the slow lift of plodding feet; also, the act of rising as if lifting something; upward movement; as, the lift of the bowsprit; hence, elevated carriage, as, the proud lift of her head.
2. Hence: a A rise in position or condition; a favorable advance; a promotion; as, this achievement brought about a lift in his fortunes; a lift in prices. b Assistance, as by lifting; aid towards attainment; help; as, to give one a lift in a wagon; to give a poor boy a lift c Lifting power or force; hence, fig., elevating power, influence, or effect, elevation of spirit or utterance.

> The traveler feels the ennobling lift of such society Lowell

3. That which is lifted; specif.: a A load, burden, or weight; as, the trunk was a big lift. b Founding. The cope of a mold, which is lifted to extract the pattern.
4. That by means of which something lifts or is lifted; specif.: a Naut. A rope leading from the masthead to the extremity of a yard below, — used for raising, supporting, or squaring, the yard. b Shoemaking. A layer of leather in the heel. c Mach. One of the steps of a cone pulley. d A hoisting machine; an elevator; a dumb-waiter. Chiefly Eng. e An elevator worked by machinery in a canal, as a substitute for a lock. f A set of pumps in a mine. g A handle, knob, or the like, used in raising a window, etc. h An exercising machine on which weights are lifted.
5. The distance through which something is lifted; specif., the distance between the flanges or ends of a bobbin on which yarn or thread is wound; also, the traverse of a piece of mechanism in winding a bobbin.
6 Extent to which a thing rises or is raised; degree of elevation; rise; as, the lift of a canal lock; hence, a rise or elevation, esp. a comparatively slight one in the ground.
7. pl. Mining. a A series of stepped workings or levels. b A series of sections or slices successively removed from a temporary pillar, as in the bord and pillar system.
8. Brickmaking. A stack of bricks in the kiln, usually from 15 to 20 courses in height.
9. Horology. That portion of the vibration of a balance during which the impulse is given. Saunier.
10. A gate that is opened by lifting; — called also lift gate.
11 A particular cut of meat. Dial. Eng.
12. a Act, or proceeds, of stealing; a theft. Obs. or Dial. Eng. b A thief. Obs. Slang.
on the lift. Dial. U. S. a Improving, esp. in health; convalescent. b About to remove; on the point of departure. c Fig.: About to die; very ill lift bridge. A kind of drawbridge, the movable part of which is lifted. See BASCULE BRIDGE, Illust.
lift'er (lĭf'tẽr), n. 1. One that lifts, specif.: a A thief. b Founding. A tool for lifting loose sand from the mold, also, a contrivance which is attached to a cope, to hold the sand together when the cope is lifted. c Mining. Any of the wooden beams used as stems for stamps in old-fashioned stamp mills. d Steam Engines. The arm or toe used on a lifting rod for opening and closing a valve in some kinds of engines. e Mach. A lifting cam. f A hoisting apparatus, or elevator, as a bucket wheel in a paper mill for raising pulp from the reservoir to the trough, or a device in a harvesting machine for elevating grain from the platform to the binder. g A kind of removable handle for lifting lids in a kitchen range or stove. h An ejector for lifting large volumes of liquid through a short distance. i The keeper for a horseshoe magnet. See ARMATURE, 2. j A piece in a kind of lever-tumbler lock that moves the tumblers, when the master or pass key is inserted and turned, exactly as they are moved by the ordinary key.
2. Any of the bottom holes drilled in the working face in driving a tunnel or heading.
lift'ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of LIFT. Specif.: vb. n. Walking Races. The raising of the rear foot from the ground before the foremost foot touches the ground. It is a transgression of the rules of heel-and-toe walking.
lifting bridge, a lift bridge. — l. day. = HEAVING DAY. — l. irons, Founding, iron strips attached to a pattern for use as handles in lifting it from the mold. — l. plan. Weaving. = TIE-UP PLAN. — l. plate, Founding, an iron plate with tapped holes, secured to a deep wooden pattern, to facilitate withdrawal from the mold. Rods, called lifting rods or screws, can be screwed into the holes for lifting or for rapping. — l. pump. = LIFT PUMP. — l. rod. a Mach. A vertical rod lifted by a rock shaft, and imparting motion to a poppet valve: also, the arm on this actuating the valve. It is used in the engines of side-wheel steamboats. b Founding. See LIFTING PLATE. — l. sail, Naut., a sail the pressure of the wind on which tends to lift the bow, as one of the jibs. Rare. — l. screw. See LIFTING PLATE. — l. set, the series of pumps used to lift the water out of a deep mine. — l. strips. = LIFTING IRONS.
lift mount. Ordnance. A mount in which the carriage is secured to a hydraulic lift which lowers the gun behind the parapet for loading and raises it for firing; — now generally superseded by the disappearing carriage.
lift pump. Mach. A pump that lifts a fluid and discharges it without forcing it out under pressure; — distinguished from force pump.
lift tenter. Windmills. A governor for regulating the speed by adjusting the sails, or for adjusting the action of grinding machinery according to the speed.
lift valve. Mach. A valve which rises perpendicularly to or from its seat.
lig'a-ment (lĭg'ā-mĕnt), n. [L. ligamentum, fr. ligare to bind. Cf. LIEN, n., LIGATURE.] 1. Anything that ties or unites one thing or part to another; a bandage; a bond.
2. Anat. A tough band of tissue serving to connect the articular extremities of bones or to support or retain an organ in place. Most ligaments connecting bones are composed of coarse bundles of very dense, white, fibrous tissue placed parallel or closely interlaced, and are pliant and flexible, but inextensile, so as to hold the parts in proper relation. A few ligaments, however, as the ligamenta subflava of man and the ligamentum nuchæ of many mammals, are composed of yellow elastic tissue, and are very elastic. Certain folds or bands of the pleura and peritoneum connecting parts or organs are also called ligaments.
3. Zoöl. In bivalve mollusks, a chitinous elastic band connecting the valves along a line adjacent to the umbones, and serving to open the valves when the adductor muscles relax. It is usually posterior to the umbones, but may extend in front of them, and is often divided into an elastic portion, the resilium (which see), internal to the hinge line, which is compressed when the valves close, and an external less elastic part, the ligament proper.
lig'a-men'tous (lĭg'ā-mĕn'tŭs), a. Of or pertaining to a ligament; forming, or formed of, a ligament. — lig'a-men'tous-ly, adv.
lig'a-men'tum (-tŭm), n.; pl. -TA (-tȧ). [L.] Ligament. lig'a-men'ta fla'va (flā'vȧ), lig'a men'ta sub-fla'va [L flavus yellow, subflavus yellowish], Anat., a series of ligaments of yellow elastic tissue connecting the laminæ of adjacent vertebræ from the axis to the sacrum. — lig'a-men'tum ar'cu-a'tum (är'kū-ā'tŭm) [L arcuatus curved], one of the aponeurotic arches to which the posterior border of the diaphragm is attached. — l. ar-te'ri-o'sum (ar-tē'rĭ-ō'sŭm), Anat., the remains of the ductus arteriosus of the fetus. — l. nu'chæ (nū'kē) [LL. gen. nuchae of the back of the neck], Zoöl. & Anat., a median ligament of the back of the neck, rudimentary in man, but highly developed and composed of yellow elastic tissue in many quadrupeds, where it assists in supporting the head. It extends from the spine of the last cervical vertebra to the occipital bone, giving off slips to the other cervicals — l. pa-tel'læ (pa-tĕl'ē) [LL. gen. patellae of the patella], Anat., a strong, flat ligamentous band extending from the patella to a point about three inches down on the tibia. It is the direct continuation of the common tendon of the extensor muscles which lie upon the front of the thigh. — l. te'res (tē'rēz) [L. teres rounded, smooth], Anat., a round ligament (which see); esp., a triangular ligament of the hip joint implanted by its apex into a depression near the middle of the head of the femur, and by its broad base into the margins of the cotyloid notch of the innominate bone.
li'gan (lī'găn), or better, but less commonly, lag'an (lăg'ăn), n. [OF. lagan, lagand.] Law. Goods sunk in the sea with a buoy attached in order that they may be found again. See JETSAM b, FLOTSAM.
li'gate (lī'gāt), v. t.; LI'GAT-ED (-gāt-ĕd); LI'GAT-ING (-gāt-ĭng). [L. ligatus, p. p. of ligare.] To tie with a ligature; to bind around; to bandage.
li-ga'tion (lī-gā'shŭn), n. [L. ligatio, fr. ligare to bind. Cf. LIAISON.] Act or process of binding, or state of being bound; also, that which binds; ligature; bond; connection

> Tied with tape, and sealed at each fold and ligation. Scott li-ga'tor (-tŏr), n. [See LIGATE.] Surg. An instrument for ligating, or for placing and fastening a ligature. lig'a-ture (lĭg'ā-tūr), n. [L. ligatura, fr. ligare, ligatum, to bind: cf. F. ligature. Cf. ALLY, LEAGUE, LEGATURA, LIABLE, LIGAMENT.] 1. Act of binding or tying.

2. Anything that binds; a band or bandage; a bond.
3. Specif: Surg a A thread or string for tying the blood vessels, particularly the arteries, to prevent hemorrhage. b A thread or wire used to remove tumors, etc.
4. A ligament of the body. Obs. or R.
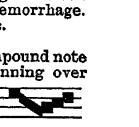
5. a Medieval Music. One of a system of compound note forms used to indicate a continuous tone running over two or more staff degrees, equivalent to a group of slurred notes in modern notation.



1 Medieval Ligature; 2 Modern Equivalent.

Ligatures are either with propriety, without propriety, or with opposed propriety. And this is with regard to the beginning of the ligature, for the latter part is either with perfection or without: and note that these differences are essential to the ligatures: for a ligature with propriety differs from one that is without, as a rational animal differs from an irrational one. Franco of Cologne (13th cent.) trans.
b Music. A curve or line connecting notes; a tie; a slur; also, a group of notes connected by a slur, or, in counterpoint, a syncopation.
6. Print. A double character, or a type consisting of two or more letters or characters united, as æ, fi, ffl; also, a connecting line or stroke; a tie.
7. The state of being bound or stiffened; stiffness; suspension of faculties; as, the ligature of a joint.
lig'a-ture (lĭg'ā-tūr), v. t.; -TURED (-tūrd); -TUR-ING (-tūr-ĭng). To bind, fasten, or furnish with a ligature; specif., Surg., to ligate; tie.

life'ly. † LIVELY. [life.]
life'mate', n. Companion for life.
life mortar. A mortar for throwing a life line or life rocket.
lif'en (lĭf'n), v. t. To make like life. Obs.
life office. A life insurance office or company.
life'-of-man', n. Any of several plants, as spikenard, bush honeysuckle, garden orpine, and mountain ash. U. S. lif'er (lĭf'ẽr), n. Slang. a One sentenced to imprisonment, transportation, or similar punishment, for life. b A life sentence.
life rail. Naut. A chain or rail run through stanchions above low gunwales to lessen danger of being swept overboard.
life rate The rate of premium for insuring a life.
life rocket. A rocket carrying a line to be shot over, or to, a ship in distress. The effective range reaches 1,000 yards or more.
life root. The golden ragwort.
life'-safe', n. A safe-conduct; a document guaranteeing personal safety. Rare. Scot.
life seat. A seat in a boat so constructed as to float and serve as a life preserver in case of need.
life shot. A shot with a light line attached to be fired over, or to, a vessel in distress.
life signal. A flare light attached to a life buoy, which is lighted automatically when the buoy is thrown into the water.
life slide. Micros. = LIFE BOX. life spot. The point behind the fin on a whale at which the lance is plunged into a vital spot.
life'spring', n. Source of life.
life'string', n. A lifecord.
life'thraw', n. Lifetime. Obs life'tide', n. The tide of life or vitality.
life tree. The tree of life. Rare.
life'ward (lĭf'wẽrd), adv. See -WARD, adverbial suffix. life'-wea'ry, a. Weary of living.
life'-while', n Lifetime. Rare.
life'-writ'ing, n. Biography. R.
lif'ey (lĭf'ĭ), a. Full of life; lively. Obs. or Scot.
life zone. = ZONE, Biogeog.
lifiade, lifiode. † LIVELIHOOD.
lift'a-ble (lĭf'tȧ-b'l), a. See -ABLE. [hammer.]
lift hammer. A kind of tilt Lif'thra-sir (lĭf'thra-sẽr), n. [Icel. Lyfþrasvr.] See RAGNAROK. lift'like', a. [See LIFT sky.] Like the sky. Obs., Scot., or Poetic.
lift lock. A canal lock.
lift ram. Mach. The ram in a hydraulic elevator which does the actual lifting, as distinguished from the pistons which automatically balance the moving parts.
lift wall. The cross wall at the head of a canal lock.
lig (lĭg). Obs. or Scot. & dial. Eng. var. of LIE.
lig'a-ble, a. [L. ligare to bind.] Music. Capable of being tied; — said of two or more notes. Obs.
lig'a-ment, v. t. To bind. Rare.
lig'a-men'ta (lĭg'ā-mĕn'tȧ), n., pl of LIGAMENTUM.
lig'a-men'tal (-tăl), a. Ligamentous. [tous.]
lig'a-men'ta-ry, a. Ligamentous.
li-gas' (lĭ-gās'), n. [Tag] An anacardiaceous tree of the Philippines (Semecarpus perottetii). It yields an illuminating resin.
lig'a-to-ry, a. [L. ligare to bind.] Binding; obligatory. Obs.
lig'-by', n. [Dial. lig to lie] A lie-by. Obs. or Dial. Eng. [Obs.] lige, v. t. & i. To lie; tell lies.
lige. † LIEGE.

li'geance (lĭ'jăns; lē'-), n. [OF. ligeance. See LIEGE.] 1. The obligation of the feudal vassal to his liege lord; hence, the duty or relationship existing between sovereign and subject, entitling the latter to protection and to receive justice, the former to faithful service, allegiance (which see).

2. The jurisdiction or territory of a liege lord or of a sovereign; as, an alien is one born out of the ligeance of the king. See ALLEGIANCE. Now Chiefly Law.

light (līt), n. [ME light, liht, AS. lēoht; akin to OS. lioht, D. & G. licht, OHG. lioht, Goth. liuhap, Icel. ljōs, L. lux light, lucere to shine, Gr. λευκός white, Skr. ruc to shine. Cf. LUCID, LUNAR, LUMINOUS.] 1. The essential condition of vision; the opposite of darkness. "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light." Gen. i. 3. While primarily regarded as simply the condition of visibility, in special connections light denotes · a An emanation from a light-giving body, often regarded as an object of perception; as, flames give light; we see the sun's light. b The sensation aroused by stimulation of the visual centers; primarily, sensation of visual form, brought out by more or less light in the different parts. When color reference is intended it is customary to qualify, as white light or colored light. c Physics. (1) That form of energy which, by its action upon the organs of vision, enables them to perform their function of sight. (2) By extension, radiation or radiant energy incapable of affecting the retina, but resembling true light in other respects. The corpuscular, emission, or Newtonian theory of light, which regarded it as consisting of material particles, or corpuscles, sent off in all directions from luminous bodies, has long been abandoned. According to the undulatory, or wave, theory at present accepted, light is transmitted from luminous bodies to the eye and other objects by the undulatory or vibrational movement of the ether (see ETHER). The velocity of this transmission is about 186,300 miles a second, and the vibrations of the ether are transverse to the direction of propagation of the wave motion. The waves vary in length from 3.9 to 7.6 ten-thousandths of a millimeter, approximately. The color impression produced varies with the wave length, and the brightness is proportional to the square of the amplitude of vibration. Waves of a similar character whose lengths fall above or below the limits mentioned are not perceptible to the eye. Those between 3.9 and about 1.0 ten-thousandth of a millimeter constitute ultra-violet light and are manifested by their photographic or other chemical action. Those exceeding 7.6 ten-thousandths in length are the infra-red waves and are detected by their thermal effects. The electromagnetic theory of light, originating with Maxwell, holds that these waves, including those of light proper, are the same in kind as those by which electromagnetic oscillations are propagated through the ether, and that light is an electromagnetic phenomenon. The most important phenomena of light are: reflection, refraction, dispersion, interference, and polarization. See these terms; also COLOR, n., 1, PHOTOMETRY, and SPECTRUM.

2. The sun's light; daylight; also, the time during which the light of the sun is visible; day; esp., the dawn of day.

And God called the light Day. Gen. i. 5.

The murderer, rising with the light, killeth the poor. Job xxiv. 14

3. A particular or local illumination (the source of which is named or understood); a radiance; a brightness; a shining; a glowing; as, we had a good light from the moon; the picture hung in a good light.

The light that never was, on sea or land,
The consecration, and the poet's dream. Wordsworth.
What light through yonder window breaks? Shak.

4. The brightness or sparkle of the eye or eyes.

The light that lies In woman's eyes. Moore.

5. That which furnishes, or is a source of, light, as the sun, a star, a candle, a lighthouse, a firework, etc.; as, he put lights in the windows; Hatteras light is one of the most brilliant on the coast; they burned flare lights.

And God made two great lights: the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night. Gen. i. 16.

6. Mental or spiritual illumination or enlightenment or its source; that which illumines or makes clear to the mind; as, to throw light on a subject; the light of religion and conscience; a good man according to his lights.

He shall never know That I had any light of this from thee. Shak.

7. One who is conspicuous or noteworthy; a model or example; as, the lights of the age or of antiquity.

8. a Visible state or condition; hence, state of exposure to public observation.

The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light. Shak.

b The power of perception by vision; eyesight. Poetic.

The light of my eyes, it also is gone from me. Ps. xxxviii 10.

c pl. Eyes. Slang.

9 The medium through which light is admitted, as a window, or pane in a window, greenhouse, or the like; a skylight; in architecture, one of the compartments of a window made by a mullion or mullions, sometimes, an opening or aperture; as, each window had ten lights.

10. Appearance due to the particular facts and circumstances presented to view; aspect from a particular point of view; as, to state things fairly and put them in the right light; circumstances put him in a false light.

Frequent consideration of a thing . . . shows it in its several lights and various ways of appearance. South.

11. Paint. That part of a picture which represents those objects upon which the light is supposed to fall; the more illuminated part of a landscape or other scene; — opposed to shade. Cf. CHIAROSCURO.

12. Law. The natural light unobstructed by erections, or a right to it; specif., an ancient light.

13. Something with which a light may be produced, or by which something, as a cigar, may be lighted; specif., pl., Chiefly Eng., matches; as, a box of lights.

14. One of the key words in an acrostic puzzle.

light of nature, Philos., natural insight; — distinguished from revelation. — 1. of one's eyes, some one greatly beloved. — 1. of the countenance, favor; grace; kindness; smiles.

Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Ps. iv. 6.

— L. of the World, Jesus Christ. John viii. 12.

2. Having light; not dark or obscure; bright; clear; as, the apartment is light; he waked before it was light.

light, v. t.; pret. & p. p. LIGHT'ED (-ĕd; -Id; 151) or LIT (lĭt); p. pr. & vb. n. LIGHT'ING. [AS. lȳhtan, līhtan, to shine. See LIGHT, n.] 1. To set fire to; to cause to burn; to set burning; to ignite; kindle; as, to light the gas, — sometimes with up.

If a thousand candles be all lighted from one. Hakewill.
And the largest lamp is lit. Macaulay.
Absence might cure it, or a second mistress Light up another flame, and put out this. Addison.

2. To give light to; to illuminate; to fill with light or furnish with lights, as, the town is lighted by electricity; hence, to cause to gleam or glow; to animate; brighten; — often with up; as, joy lighted up his eyes.

One hundred years ago, to have lit this theater as brilliantly as it is now lighted would have cost . . . fifty pounds. F. Harrison.
Sometimes a chance story lights up for us this work of emancipation J. R. Green.

3. To attend or conduct with a light; to show the way to by means of a light.

His bishops lead him forth, and light him on. Landor.

Syn. — See ILLUMINATE.

to light a fire, to kindle the material of a fire.

light, v. i. 1. To emit light; to shine; to be burning. Obs.

2. To become, or grow, light; to lighten. Obs.

The day, whene'er it lights. Shak.

3. To become ignited; take fire; as, the match will light.

4. To be illuminated, to receive light; to brighten; — usually with up; as, the room lights up well; his face lighted up at the news.

to light up, to light a cigar, pipe, or cigarette: to begin to smoke. Colloq.

light, a. [ME ight, liht, AS. līht, lēoht; akin to D. licht, G. leicht, OHG. līhti, Icel. lēttr, Dan. let, Sw. lätt, Goth. leihts.] 1. Having little, or comparatively little, weight; not heavy; as, a light load; a light overcoat; the problem of making artillery light without sacrifice of strength.

2. Of small specific gravity; having little, or comparatively little, weight in proportion to bulk; as, as light as thistledown; wood floats, being lighter than water.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity, . . . insomuch that I could not guess which was light or heavy. Addison.

3. Below the legal, standard, or usual weight, as, light coin.

4. Not heavy or massive in construction or appearance; as, a light bridge was thrown over the river; light tracery; the beautifully light spire of Salisbury cathedral.

5. a Slight; not important; as, a light error or sin; he was held in light esteem. "Trifles light as air." Shak. b Cheap; of little worth; little esteemed. Archaic.

6. Not burdensome; easy to be endured, performed, understood, or the like; not severe; not difficult; as, a light affliction; light work; light novels; light taxes.

Light sufferings give us leisure to complain. Dryden.

7. a Easy to be digested; not oppressive to the stomach; hence, moderate; slight; as, light food; a light lunch. b Cookery. Well leavened; not soggy or heavy; as, light biscuit, pastry, etc. c Of wines, beers, etc., not heavy or strong; having a relatively small percentage of alcohol.

8. Not heavily burdened or encumbered; carrying a relatively small cargo, equipment, or load, or none at all; as, light cavalry and infantry; the ship returned light; the experienced traveler goes light.

9. Not burdened or oppressed by care or suffering; buoyant; happy; as, a light heart; a light spirit.

Had she been light, like you,
Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit,
She might ha' been a grandam ere she died. Shak.

10. Not heavy or violent in movement, action, or pressure, as, a light touch; a light breeze; a light sleep.

11. Moving or acting as if clear of impediments; hence, active; nimble; swift; as, light of foot or hand.

12. Indulging in, inclined to, or marked by, levity; wanting dignity; trifling; frivolous; as, a light, vain person; light jests; a light mind.

Syn. — Thoughtlessness, inconstancy, unsteadiness, instability, giddiness, gayety, airiness. — LIGHTNESS, LEVITY, FRIVOLITY, FLIPPANCY, VOLATILITY, FLIGHTINESS. LIGHTNESS, as here compared, implies a general lack of weight or seriousness in character, conduct, or speech; LEVITY usually suggests more specifically trifling or unseasonable gayety; as, "There is a lightness about the feminine mind — a touch and go" (G. Eliot); "Ponderous works produce no effect. . . . This is in part an answer to what you say about treating with lightness what is matter of life and death to so many people" (M. Arnold); "her levity, her frivolous laughter, her unwomanly jests" (J. R. Green); "My readers will hardly have begun to laugh, before they will be called upon to conceal that levity, and peruse me with a more serious air" (Cowper). FRIVOLITY adds to lightness the implication of empty or idle speech or conduct; FLIPPANCY is esp. unbecoming levity or pertness in speaking of serious or sacred things; as, "gay without frivolity" (M. Arnold); cf. "Its purport is so frivolous, so very remote from all aim at instruction or utility" (Mad. D'Arblay); "I am afraid that this sounds flippant" (Byron); "What is meant to be easy and sprightly is vulgar and flippant" (Macaulay); "He [Tennyson] was always reverent — hating all levity or flippancy in thought or language about divine things" (Duke of Argyll). VOLATILITY is such lightness or fickleness of disposition as precludes long or serious dwelling upon any one idea or plan; FLIGHTINESS is extreme volatility; it sometimes implies lack of mental balance; as, "'Bird-witted' [Bacon]: incapable of fixed attention, volatile" (W. A. Wright); "A brain of feather! Very right, with wit that's flighty, learning light" (Goldsmith); "A horse is a fine lady among animals, flighty, timid" (Stevenson). See EBULLITION.

light'ning (līt'nĭng), n. [For lightenng, fr. lighten to flash.] The flashing of light produced by a discharge of atmospheric electricity from one cloud to another or from a cloud to the earth; hence, the discharge itself. The chief forms are; ball, or globular, lightning; chain, or forked, lightning; heat lightning; sheet lightning (see these terms). Cf. THUNDER.

The Horn Lightning Arrester. A Gap (G) is formed by diverging Horns (H H) supported by Petticoat Insulators, P P. The Horns are connected by the Terminals (T T), one with the ground, and the other with the line.

lightning arrester. Elec. Any of various devices for protecting electrical apparatus and their operators from injury by abnormal rise of voltage caused by lightning or otherwise. It usually consists of one or more air gaps in series between the line wires and ground, and, in power circuits, of some means for suppressing the arc to prevent the power current from following a discharge. Called also lightning discharger or protector.

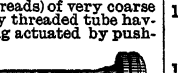
lightning brace. A straight brace for bits the shank of which consists of a screw (usually having four distinct threads) of very coarse pitch sliding within a correspondingly threaded tube having a handle at the end, the tool being actuated by pushing the handle.



Lightning Brace.

lightning bug. A firefly.

lightning pains. Med. Intense lancinating pains observed in locomotor ataxia; fulgurating pains.

lightning rod. A metallic rod set up on a building, or on the mast of a vessel, and connected with the moist earth or water below, to protect the building or vessel from lightning.

2. a A species of Acacia (Acacia melanoxylon); — so called from the light weight of its wood. Called also blackwood. Australia. b Any of several trees containing inflammable volatile substances, as the candlewoods. c = COACHWOOD a.

light year. Astron. The distance over which light can travel in a year's time; — used as a unit in expressing stellar distances. It is more than 63,000 times as great as the distance from the earth to the sun.

lign'-al'oes (lĭn'ăl'ōz; lĭg-năl'ōz; 277), n. [OF. lignaloes, L. lignum aloes, wood of aloe.] 1. a Agalloch, or aloes wood. b = LINALOA.

2. The drug aloes.

lig'ne-ous (lĭg'nē-ŭs), a. [L. ligneus, fr. lignum wood. Cf. LIGNOUS.] Of, of the nature of, or like, wood; woody.

ligneous marble, wood treated so as to resemble marble.

lig-nes'cent (lĭg-nĕs'ĕnt), a. [ligno- + -escent.] Bot. Somewhat woody, or becoming woody.

lig'ni- (lĭg'nĭ-). Combining form from Latin lignum, meaning wood. Cf. LIGNO-.

lig'ni-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. [See LIGNIFY.] Bot. The process of becoming ligneous, or woody. It is a chemical alteration of constituents of the cell wall, converting them into lignin. Cf. CUTICULARIZATION, SUBERIZATION.

lig'ni-fy (lĭg'nĭ-fī), v. t.; LIG'NI-FIED (-fīd); LIG'NI-FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [ligni- + -fy.] Bot. To convert into wood. — v. i. To become wood; to undergo lignification.

lig'nin (lĭg'nĭn), n. [ligni- + -in.] Bot. A substance or mixture of substances which, with cellulose, constitutes the essential part of woody tissue. It is related physiologically to cellulose, but its chemical nature is not yet clear.

lig'nite (-nīt), n. [L. lignum wood: cf. F. lignite.] Min. A variety of coal intermediate between peat and bituminous coal, esp. one in which the texture of the original wood is distinct; — called also brown coal, wood coal. See COAL, 3. It is of comparatively recent origin, is noncaking, contains much volatile matter, and is usually brownish black.

lig-nit'ic (lĭg-nĭt'ĭk), a. Containing lignite; resembling, or of the nature of, lignite; as, lignitic clay.

lignitic formation, Geol., a formation of the lower part of the Eocene system in Alabama and adjacent States.

lig'no- (lĭg'nō-), lign-. Combining form from Latin lignum, meaning wood. Cf. LIGNI-.

lig'no-cel'lu-lose (-sĕl'ū-lōs), n. [ligno- + cellulose.] Bot. Any of several closely related substances constituting the essential part of woody tissue. They are regarded as compounds of lignin with simple celluloses.

lig'no-cer'ic (-sĕr'ĭk), a. [ligno- + L. cera wax.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline acid, $C_{24}H_{48}O_2$, of the formic acid series, found in the tar, wax, or paraffin obtained by distilling certain kinds of wood, as the beech. Its glyceryl ester occurs in peanut oil.

lig'nose (lĭg'nōs), n. [ligno- + -ose.] 1. Bot. Cellulose, or a variety of lignin.

2. An explosive compound of the dynamite class, consisting of wood fiber and nitroglycerin.

lig'no-sul'phite (lĭg'nō-sŭl'fīt), n. [ligno- + sulphite.] A liquid obtained by treating crude cellulose with a solution of calcium bisulphite, which dissolves lignin and other substances. It is used in medicine as an inhalant in certain laryngeal and pulmonary affections.

lig'num (lĭg'nŭm), n. [L., wood.] 1. Woody tissue. Obs.

2. Any of various trees, — chiefly in combination, as lignum aloes, lignum-vitæ, etc.

lig'num-vi'tæ (-vī'tē), n. [L., wood of life; lignum wood + vita, gen. vitæ, life.] a Any tropical American zygophyllaceous tree of the genus Guaiacum, esp. G. officinale and G. sanctum; also, the very hard, heavy wood of these trees, used for many purposes. b In Australia and New Zealand, any of various other hard-wooded trees, as species of Metrosideros, Acacia, Eucalyptus, and Vitex.

lig'ro-ine, lig'ro-in (lĭg'rō-ĭn), n. A volatile inflammable liquid used as a solvent in chemistry and pharmacy and to a limited extent as an illuminant. See PETROLEUM.

light'en-ing, n. [See 1st LIGHTEN.] Assaying. = FULGURATION, 2. [LAUGHTER.]

ligh'ter. Dial. Eng. var. of light'er-man (līt'ẽr-măn), n. A person employed on, or who manages, a lighter.

light'er-screw', n. A screw for adjusting the distance between the stones in a grinding mill.

More clergymen were impoverished by the late war than ever in the like space before. Sprat.

2. Specif.: a Closely resembling its original; — said of a portrait, etc.; as, the photograph is not at all like. b Suiting; befitting; — now only in the sense of: characteristic of; as, such behavior was just like him. c Indicative of; as, it looks like good fishing. d Inclined toward; disposed to; as, to feel like taking a walk. e In illiterate use, such as; as, pies like mother used to make.

☞ Like . . . like are used correlatively with the force of as . . . so; as, "Like master, like man."

3. = LIKELY. Now Archaic or Dial., exc., chiefly in colloquial use, with the infinitive; as, they're like to meet again. See HAD LIKE TO.

But it is like the jolly world about us will scoff South.

☞ The phrases anything like, nothing like, something like, with the sense of anything, nothing, something approximating in character or amount, are also used adverbially; as, the second copy is nothing like so well drawn. Something like, both as adjective and adverbial phrase, has colloquially an elliptical sense of something like what, or somewhat as (he, it, etc., should be); as, this looks something like.

☞ Like is used at will as a suffix with nouns to form adjectives expressing resemblance; as, manlike, like a man; childlike, like a child; god-like, like a god, etc. Combinations which would otherwise be typographically objectionable, as bell-like, ball-like, etc., are hyphened. Such compounds in -like are not entered in the Vocabulary of this book except for special reason, as frequency of usage, the existence of secondary senses, etc.

like as we lie, Golf, having each played an equal number of strokes; — said of opposing players. — 1. figures, Geom., similar figures.

like (līk), n. 1. That which is equal or similar to another; the counterpart; an exact resemblance; a copy; an equal.

D.* — the l., something similar or of the same kind; anything having a resemblance; as, dairy products such as butter, cheese, and the like. "Did you ever hear the like?" Shak. — the l., or likes, of, a person or thing like, or equal to; as, did you ever see the likes of that boy?

Are there no harems left in Stamboul for the likes of thee to sweep and clean? Du Maurier like (līk), adv. or prep. [AS. gelīce. See LIKE, a.] 1. In a manner or to an extent like that of; as, do not act like him. By the omission of to, like is often construed as a preposition; as, wool like snow in whiteness; you are like him.

He maketh them to stagger like a drunken man. Job xii. 25

2. Alike; equally; as, both like ill-advised. Archaic.
3. In a manner according with. Obs. Sidney.
4. In the manner of one that is; — now only in like mad, in a furious manner.

He proceeded from looking to liking; and from liking to loving. Sir P. Sidney.

Syn. — LIKE, LOVE. As applied to persons, LIKE suggests varying degrees of attraction; LOVE implies deep or strong attachment. The habitual use of love for like, with reference to trivial objects (as, I love ice cream), is a vulgarism; but love is often used for like in humorous hyperbole; as, "old Sarah Battle, . . . who, next to her devotions, loved a good game of whist" (Lamb); cf., "I like a church; I like a cowl; I love a prophet of the soul" (Emerson). See ATTACHMENT, FOND.

like, n. A liking; a preference; an inclination; a fancy; — usually in pl.; as, our likes and dislikes.

It seems likely that he was in hope of being busy. Johnson.

3. Of such a nature or so circumstanced as to render something probable; — followed by an infinitive; as, he is likely to go; it is likely to rain; the fate is likely to befall them.
4. Appearing fit or adapted; suitable or qualified (for something expressed or implied); as, this is a likely place to fish; old wells are likely sources of contagion.
5. Having such qualities as make success, capability, or excellence probable; promising; as, a likely young man; a likely servant; a likely colt.
6. Agreeable; comely; seemly. Rare or Dial.

Syn. — LIKELY, PROBABLE. That is LIKELY (the stronger word) which there is good reason to expect or believe; that is PROBABLE which there is more reason to expect or believe than not; as, he is likely to come soon, the report is likely to be true; his coming is possible and even probable, the probable origin of the rumor. See APT.

like'ly, adv. 1. In a similar manner; also, with verisimilitude. Obs.
2. In all probability; probably; — now usually with most, quite, very, etc.; as, you are very likely right.

the Babylonian Captivity. The Hebrew word is translated in Isaiah xxxiv. 14, A. V., by "screech owl," and in R. V. by "night-monster." In post-Biblical Jewish literature she is represented as a night demon or vampire in the form of a seductive woman, often as having baneful powers over children. Cf. ASMODEUS. According to a story, apparently of recent origin, she was the first wife of Adam, who was compelled to repudiate her, Eve being then created for him. In the demonology of the Middle Ages Lilith was a famous witch, and she is introduced as such in the Walpurgis-night scene in Goethe's "Faust."

Lil'i-um (lĭl'ĭ-ŭm), n. [L., lily. See LILY.] Bot. A large genus of herbaceous plants, type of the Liliaceæ, having scaly bulbs, whorled or scattered leaves, showy flowers with a perianth of six similar segments, versatile anthers, and 3-lobed stigma. The 50 or more species are widely distributed in temperate regions. See LILY.

lil'y (lĭl'ĭ), n.; pl. -IES (-ĭz). [AS. lilie, L. lilium, Gr. λείριον. Cf. FLOWER-DE-LUCE.]

1 Any plant, flower, or bulb belonging to the genus Lilium. Lilies have been in cultivation since the earliest times, and their erect or nodding funnel-shaped flowers, with perianth segments often elegantly recurved, are familiar objects in decorative art. The flowers exhibit a wide range of color, from pure white through shades of pink to yellow, orange, scarlet, and crimson, often mottled or striped. Many of the commonly cultivated species, as the gold-banded lily (L. auratum), have developed distinct horticultural varieties. Among the most popular garden lilies are the tiger lily (L. tigrinum); Madonna lily (L. candidum); garden Turk's-cap (L. martagon); coral lily (L. tenuifolium); and forms of L. speciosum and L. elegans. See EASTER LILY, etc.

li'ma-çon' (lē'mä-sôN'; lĭm'ä-sŏn), n. [F., lit., a snail.] Geom. A quartic curve, invented and named by Pascal. Its polar equation is $r = a \cos \theta + b$; that is, it is formed by adding the constant b to all chords drawn in a circle of diameter a from one point of the circle.

Li'ma oil (lī'mä). The dark, heavy petroleum of the Lima field, in northern Ohio and eastern Indiana. It is found in the Trenton limestone, and is difficult to refine because of its sulphur content. It is much used as a fuel.

li-ma'tion (lī-mā'shŭn), n. [L. limatus, p. p. of limare to file, fr. lima file: cf. F. limation.] 1. A filing or polishing.

2. Astron. Rectification of errors in theory or observation. Obs.

Li'max (lī'măks), n. [L., a slug, snail.] Zoöl. The genus containing the typical slugs (see SLUG). In old classifications it included all or most of the land snails having the shell rudimentary or absent. In its modern restricted sense it includes several of the common and troublesome garden slugs. It is the type of a family, Limacidæ, now defined rather by the dentition and anatomical characters than by the development of the shell, and hence including also some genera having an external spiral shell.

limb (lĭm), n. [ME. lim, AS. lim; akin to Icel. limr limb, lim branch of a tree, Sw. & Dan. lem limb; cf. also AS. liδ, OHG. lid, gilid, G. glied, D. lid, geled, Goth. lipus. LIMB a border.] 1. [often cap.] A region supposed by some of the Scholastic theologians to lie on the edge or confines of hell. Of this belief Milton has made use in his "Paradise Lost" (see Book III. 440-497). Dante has fixed his limbo, in which the distinguished spirits of antiquity are confined, as the outermost circle of hell. The ‖ lim'bus pa'trum was considered as a place for the souls of good men who lived before the coming of Christ. The ‖ lim'bus in-fan'ti-um was said to be a similar place for the souls of unbaptized infants. To these was added, in the popular belief, the ‖ lim'bus fa'tu-o'rum (fāt'ū-ō'rŭm), or fools' paradise.

A limbo large and broad, since called The paradise of fools. Milton

2. Hence: A place of restraint or confinement, or a place or condition of neglect or oblivion.

2. A caustic, highly infusible substance, white when pure, obtained by calcining limestone, shells, or other forms of calcium carbonate; — called also quicklime. Chemically, lime is calcium oxide, CaO, carbon dioxide being driven off in the calcining process. Quicklime develops great heat when treated with water, forming a crumbly mass of slaked lime, which is calcium hydroxide, $Ca(OH)_2$. By exposure to the air, however, it is slowly converted into powdery carbonate, and is then said to be air-slaked lime. Lime is much used in the preparation of cements and mortars, in various chemical industries, in medicine, etc. The salts of calcium were formerly considered to be binary compounds of lime with an acid oxide; hence the phrases carbonate of lime, lime feldspar, etc., still in common use.

3. = RAUPENLEIM.

4. Leather Manuf. A vat or pit in which skins are limed.

The scale consists of two diagonal lines, one on each leg of the sector, divided into 60 equal parts and marked C. — l. of circumvallation. See CIRCUMVALLATION. — l. of collimation, Astron. & Physics, the telescopic line of sight through the center of the objective and the intersection of the middle threads of the reticle. — l. of columns, Mil. & Nav., a number of parallel columns whose heads or fronts are in a straight line. — l. of defense. a Mil. Any artificial or natural barrier which can be readily employed for defense against invasion or attack, as a line of fortifications, a river, or a mountain chain. b Fort. See BASTIONED FRONT. c See ARMY ORGANIZATION. — L. of Demarcation or Partition, Hist., an imaginary line running due north and south one hundred leagues line running due north and south one hundred leagues west of the Azores, fixed by a papal bull of Alexander VI., May 5, 1493, to delimit the possessions of Spain and Portugal in the New World. All lands discovered east of this line were to fall to Portugal and all west of it to Spain. By the Treaty of Tordesillas (1494) between Spain and Portugal, the line was shifted 270 leagues farther west. — l. of departure, Gun., the actual direction in which a projectile leaves the bore of a firearm; — called also line of fire. — l. of dip, Geol., direction of dip. See DIP. — l. of direction. See PERSPECTIVE. — l. of distance, the line from the eye to the principal point in the plane, in perspective. — l. of fate. See PALMISTRY. — l. of fire. See LINE OF DEPARTURE. — l. of flotation, the plane or line in which the horizontal surface of a fluid cuts a body floating in it. — l. of flow. Math. a The line of a velocity vector, q. See line of a vector, above. b The path of any point in an assemblage of points moving under some one law. — l. of force, Physics, any line in a space in which forces are acting, so drawn that at every point of the line its tangent is the direction of the resultant of all the forces. It cuts at right angles every equipotential surface which it meets. Specif., Magnetism, a line in proximity to a magnet or electrical conductor carrying current, so drawn that any point in it is tangential with the direction of a short compass needle held at that point. The intensity of different parts of the field is conventionally indicated by the number of lines per unit area. These lines are commonly termed C. G. S., or unit, lines, there being one line per sq. cm. in a unit magnetic field. See LINE OF INDUCTION. — l. of fortune. See PALMISTRY. — l. of fracture, Mech., a line along which a substance is most liable to break. — l. of (the) head. See PALMISTRY. — l. of health. See PALMISTRY. — l. of (the) heart. See PALMISTRY. — l. of incidence, the line in the direction of which a surface is struck by a body, ray of light, or the like. — l. of induction, Physics, a line of magnetic flux or induction; also, a line of force (which see). A magnetizing force produces or sets up a magnetic induction. In a nonmagnetic medium, as air, with unit permeability, the two are equal; i. e., the lines of induction are numerically equal to the lines of force. In a magnetic material, as iron, with higher permeability, the lines of induction are proportionately greater than the lines of force. Frequently no distinction is made between lines of induction and lines of force. — l. of level, a line on a level surface; a line that intersects all lines of flow orthogonally. — l. of levels, Surv., a connected series of levels, as that showing the profile of the ground along a railroad. — l. of life. See PALMISTRY. — l. of lines. = GUNTER'S LINE a. — l. of (the) liver. See PALMISTRY. — l. of Mars. See PALMISTRY. — l. of Mercury. See PALMISTRY. — l. of metal, Mil., in sighting a gun, the line of sight passing along the upper surface of the barrel, no elevated sight being used. Rare. — l. of no declination. Surv. = AGONIC LINE. — l. of nodes, Astron., a straight line joining the two opposite nodes of an orbit, or points of intersection with the ecliptic. — l. of no variation. Navig. See LINE OF NO DECLINATION. — l. of numbers. = GUNTER'S LINE a. — l. of pressure, Arch. & Engin., a broken line joining the points of resultant pressure between the voussoirs of an arch. — l. of rectification, the intersection of two consecutive planes of rectification. — l. of regard, Optics, a straight line from the fixation point, or point of regard, to the center of rotation of the eye. See VISION, Illust. — l. of Saturn. See PALMISTRY. — l. of scrimmage, Amer. Football, for each side, an imaginary line, parallel to the goal lines, passing through that point of the ball nearest the side's own goal line when the ball is laid on the ground preparatory to a scrimmage. — l. of sight. a Firearms. The line which passes through the front and rear sight, at any elevation, when they are sighted at an object. b Optics. = LINE OF VISION. c See PERSPECTIVE, Illust. d Astron. The line which joins the earth and any heavenly body; as, motion in the line of sight = motion toward or from the earth. — l. of spherical curvature, a line whose points are all umbilics of a surface. — l. of striction (of a ruled surface), Geom., the locus of the centers of the elements. — l. of supply, Mil., the roads, railways, rivers, or the like, in the rear of an army, by which its supplies are brought to the front. — l. of swiftest descent, the brachistochrone — l. of syzygies, Astron., the straight line connecting earth, sun, and moon (or a planet) when the latter is in conjunction or opposition; — used chiefly of the moon. — l. of virtual slope. = HYDRAULIC GRADIENT. — l. of vision, a straight line joining the fovea of the eye with the fixation point. It makes an angle of about five degrees with the optic axis, and is nearly coincident with the line of regard. See VISION. — on the line, on a level with the eye of the spectator (the most favorable position); — said of a picture, as hung in an exhibition of pictures. — out of one's l., unsuited to one's liking, ability, etc. Cf. in one's line, above.

Line of Beauty (delineated on a palette).

line (līn), v. t. [From LINE a cord: cf. F. ligner.]. 1. To measure, sound, or examine by means of a line; also, to reach, or extend, to. Obs. or R.

2. To represent by lines; delineate; draw; portray, esp. in outline; hence, to outline. "Pictures fairest lined." Shak.

3. To mark with a line or lines; to cover with lines; as, to line a copy book.

> His face, though lined, bore few traces of anxiety. Dickens.

4. To read aloud line by line so that the congregation may sing the words; as, to line out a hymn. See DEACON, v. t., 1.

5. To form into a line; to align; hence, rarely, to assign (to a place or work), as, to line troops.

6. To place, be placed, or be, in a line along; also, to place a line or lines along; as, wharves line the harbor; to line the streets with troops. Cf. 2d LINE, defs. 3 & 5.

7. Baseball, etc. To throw or hit (the ball) so that it travels swiftly and not far above the ground. Cant.

8. To track (wild bees) to their nest by following their line of flight. U. S.

to line off, to mark off; to lay off by, or within, lines. — to l. out. a Mech. To mark (a casting or other piece of work) with lines to indicate the amount of material to be taken off by the bench hand, machinists, etc. b Forestry. To transplant (seedlings) to rows in the nursery. c = LINE, v. t., 4, above. — to line up, Mach., to put in alignment; to put in correct adjustment for smooth running.

line (līn), v. i. 1. a To take position in a line; to form a line; — usually with up; as, the soldiers lined up. b To be on the same line; to adjoin; as, the farms line. Rare.

2. a To measure or sound with a line. b To fish with a line. Local, U. S.

line, v. t. [F. ligner. Cf. LIME in this sense.] To copulate with; — said of dogs, wolves, etc.

lin'e-age (lĭn'ē-ăj), n [ME. linage, F. lignage, fr. L. linea line. See 3d LINE.] Descent in a line from a common progenitor; race, family; descending line of offspring or ascending line of parentage.

> Both the lineage and the certain sire
> From which I sprung, from me are hidden yet Spenser.

lin'e-al (-ăl), a. [L. linealis belonging to a line, fr. linea line: cf. F. linéal. See 3d LINE.] 1. Of or pertaining to a line or lines; measured on, or ascertained by, a line; having the direction of a line; linear; as, lineal magnitude.

2. Composed of lines; delineated; as, lineal designs.

3. Consisting of, or being in, a direct line of ancestry or descendants; — opposed to collateral; as, a lineal descent; a lineal descendant; his lineal ancestors.

4. Relating to, or derived from, ancestors in the direct line; hereditary; as, a lineal feud.

5. Descended in a direct line; in the line of succession through lineage. "Lineal to the throne." Dryden.

> Queen Isabel . . .
> Was lineal of the Lady Ermengare. Shak.

lineal measure. = LINEAR MEASURE. — l. promotion, the promotion of an officer by seniority according to his lineal rank. — l. rank, Mil., the rank of any officer in his arm of the service; — distinguished from relative rank in the entire army; as, the lineal rank of officers of infantry.

lin'e-al'i-ty (-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality of being lineal.

lin'e-al-ly (lĭn'ē-ăl-ĭ), adv. In a lineal manner; as: a By descent in a direct line; as, he is lineally descended from the Conqueror. b In a line, esp. in a straight line; as, he went a mile lineally to the east. c By a line or lines; as, it was lineally depicted. Rare. d As concerns lines; as, the boat is lineally graceful. e By line, or line by line.

lin'e-a-ment (-ȧ-mĕnt), n. [L lineamentum, fr. linea line: cf. F. linéament. See 3d LINE.] 1. One of the outlines, exterior features, or contours of a body or figure, particularly of the face; distinctive feature; form; mark; outline; — usually in the pl.; often fig. "The lineaments of the body." Locke. "Lineaments in the character." Swift.

2. A rudiment; a trace; a small portion. Obs. Oxf. E. D.

3. Seismology. An essentially rectilinear topographic feature resulting from a fault.

lin'e-ar (-ē-ȧr), a. [L. linearis, linearius, fr. linea line: cf. F. linéaire. See 3d LINE.] 1. Of or pert. to a line or lines; consisting of lines; in a straight direction; lineal.

2. Resembling a line; narrow; uniform in width and comparatively long; threadlike; as, a wire is a linear conductor; a linear leaf.

linear algebra, that in which every expression equals an expression linear in certain units. — l. complex, Math., a complex of lines in space comprising in each plane all and only the lines through one point, and through each point all and only the lines in one plane. The point is then the pole of the plane, and the plane the polar of the point. See POLE. — l. content, length. — l. demonstration, a pure synthetic geometric demonstration. — l. differential equation, Math., an equation of the first degree only in the dependent variables and their differential coefficients. — l. equation, Math., an equation of the first degree between two variables; — so called because every such equation in Cartesian coordinates represents a right line. — l. function, Math., one in which the variables appear only in the first degree, multiplied by constants, and combined only by addition and subtraction. — l. hieroglyphic. See HIEROGLYPHIC, n., 1. — l. integral, one whose path of integration in the plane of the complex variable consists of line segments. — l. measure, measurement of length; also, a system for such measurement. In English linear measure 12 lines make 1 inch, 12 inches 1 foot, 3 feet 1 yard, 5½ yards 1 rod or pole, 40 rods 1 furlong, 8 furlongs 1 mile. See also METRIC SYSTEM. — l. micrometer. = SCALE MICROMETER. — l. momentum. See MOMENTUM. — l. numbers, Math., numbers used to express length or one-dimensional extent; as, the radius of a circle or side of a square is 2, that is, 2 units of length. — l. perspective. See PERSPECTIVE. — l. problem, Geom., a problem that may be solved geometrically by the use of right lines alone. — l. segment, Math., the set of all values of x between a and b, for which $a \leqslant x \leqslant b$. — l. substitution. Math. a The substitution for each of n variables $x, y, \ldots$ of a linear homogeneous function of n other variables, $X, Y, \ldots$; thus: $x = lX + mY \ldots, y = b'X + m'Y + \ldots$, etc. b The transformation of the plane of the complex number z by the substitution of $w = \frac{az+b}{cz+d}$; — called also homographic substitution, and homographic, linear, or bilinear, transformation. — l. transformation. = LINEAR SUBSTITUTION b.

lin'e-ar'i-ty (lĭn'ē-ăr'ĭ-tĭ), n. The fact or character of being linear.

lin'e-ar-lan'ce-o-late, a. Bot. Intermediate in form between linear and lanceolate; narrowly lanceolate.

lin'e-ate (lĭn'ē-āt), a. [L. lineatus, p. p. of lineare to reduce to a straight line, fr. linea line.] Marked with lines or stripes.

lin'e-a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n. [L. lineatio the drawing of a line.] 1. Delineation; act of marking with lines or outlining; hence, an outline.

2. An arrangement of lines; markings.

3. Arrangement by lines (of verse or prose).

lin'e-a-ture (lĭn'ē-ȧ-tūr), n. 1. Anything having outline; an outline. Obs.

2. A screen such as is used in half-tone work.

line'a-ble Var. of LINABLE.

‖ li'ne-a e-las'ti-ca (lĭn'ē-ȧ ē-lăs'tĭ-kȧ) [NL.] = ELASTIC CURVE.

line'age. Var. of LINAGE.

lin'e-a-men'tal, a. Of or pert. to outline or features. Obs. — lin'e-a-men'tal-ly, adv. Obs. — lin'e-a-men-ta'tion (lĭn'ē-ȧ-mĕn-tā'shŭn), n. Act of bestowing or determining form. Rare. —

lin'e-am'e-ter (-ăm'ē-tẽr), n. [linea + -meter.] A line-measuring device. — lin'e-ar-en'ate, a. Bot. Shaped like a long slender sword. — lin'e-ar-ize (lĭn'ē-ȧr-īz), v. t. To make linear; to give a linear form to — lin'e-ar-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'-), n. — lin'e-ar-ly, adv. of LINEAR. — lin'e-ar-ob'long, a. Bot Narrowly oblong. — lin'e-a-ry, a. Linear. Obs. —

lin'e-ate (lĭn'ē-āt), v. t. [See LINEATE, a.] To delineate; to mark with lines. Obs. or R. — lin'e-at'ed (-āt'ĕd), a. Lineate. —

line bait. Bait used in fishing with a hand line. — line breeding. Breeding from stock of one strain or variety; specif., breeding of successive generations inter se for accomplishing particular results. — line conch. A spiral marine lined (līnd), p. a Having a lining; specif., Her., having a lining of specified tincture; as, a mantle gules, lined ermine.

lined blade, a blade, usually of iron, with a steel cutting edge attached, as in some large shears. — 1. gold, gold having a lining, or backing, of another metal.
lined (līnd), p. a. 1. Marked with lines.
2. Her. Having a line, often of specified tincture, attached to its collar; — said of an animal.
line engraving. a Engraving in which the effects are produced by lines of different width and closeness, cut into copper or similar material; also, a plate so engraved. b A picture produced by printing from such an engraving.
line fishing. Fishing with a line, usually a hand line, as distinguished from fishing with a net, trawl, or the like.
line geometry. The Plückerian geometry, which assumes the line, instead of the point, as the element of space.
line'man (līn'măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). 1. One who carries the line in surveying, etc.
2. A man employed to examine the rails of a railroad to see if they are in good condition.
3. A man employed to set up or repair telegraph or telephone lines, or electric light or power wires.
lin'en (lĭn'ĕn; -ĭn; 151), n. [Prop. an adj. from ME. lin flax, AS. līn flax, whence linen made of flax; akin to OS, Icel., & MHG. līn flax and linen, G. lein, leinen, linen, Sw. lin flax, Goth. lein linen, L. linum flax, linen, Gr. λινον. Cf. LINE a cord, LINSEED.] 1. Thread or cloth made of flax or (rarely) of hemp; — used in a general sense to include articles made of linen, cambric, shirting, sheeting, tablecloths, etc. "In linen white as milk." Robert of Brunne.
2. Garments usually or chiefly of linen, esp. shirts, collars, cuffs, and (rarely) other underclothing.
lin'en, a. [ME. fr. lin linen. See LINEN, n.] 1. Made of flax or linen; as, linen cloth; a linen stocking.
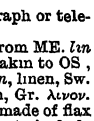
2. Resembling linen cloth; white; pale. Rare. "Those linen cheeks of thine." Shak.
linen draper. A retail dealer in linen goods. — linen draperess. — linen drapery.
linen fold. Arch. A carved or molded ornament representing a fold or scroll of linen.



Linen Fold.

linen prover. A small microscope for counting the threads in a given space in a fabric in order to determine its fineness.
lin'e-o-late (lĭn'ē-ō-lāt), a. [L. lineola, dim. of linea line.] Zoöl. & Bot. Marked with fine lines.
lin'e-o-lin'e-ar (-lĭn'ē-ăr), a. [L. linea line + E. linear.] Geom. Linear in each separately, but not necessarily in both together, of two variables or sets of variables; thus, $ax + ky$ is linear in both x and y together, but xy is lineo-linear only, being of second degree in x and y together.
lin'e-o-po'lar (-pō'lăr), a. [L. linea line + E. polar.] Math. Resulting from taking the (n—1)th polar of a locus with respect to another locus of nth order, wherein the polar of a point is a line.
lin'er (līn'ĕr), n. [From 2d LINE.] 1. One who lines.
2. A slab on which small pieces of marble, tile, etc., are fastened for grinding.
3. Something used to line or back up another part; specif.: a Mach. (1) A replaceable tube to fit inside an engine cylinder, a bushing for a bearing, or the like. (2) A shim. b Shipbuilding. A narrow strip of plate to fill in between a frame and an outer strake. c A long narrow casing for a bore hole, as of an oil well.
lin'er, n. [From 3d LINE.] 1. A vessel belonging to a regular line of vessels; as, a transatlantic liner; also, now rarely, a line-of-battle ship; a ship of the line.
2. Baseball. A ball which, when struck, flies through the air in a nearly straight line not far from the ground.
3 In Scotland, an official who traces the boundaries of estates. Oxf. E. D.
4. One who paints, or otherwise makes, lines on anything; also, anything with which lines are made, as a sable brush used by coach painters, or a house painter's fitch.
5. A soldier of the line. Obs. or R.
6. A penny-a-liner Rare.
7. A marble, quoit, or the like, that rests on a line in play.
8. A man or boat engaged in fishing with a line. Rare.
9. A picture hung "on the line." See under LINE. Colloq.
line shaft. Mach. A main shaft of considerable length, in a shop or factory, usually bearing a number of pulleys by which machines are driven, commonly by means of countershafts; — called also line, or main line.
lines'man (līnz'măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). 1. A soldier of the line. Rare.
2. A lineman, on a railroad, telegraph, or telephone line.
3. a Lawn Tennis. An umpire who determines whether a ball falls on one side or the other of the lines in the court which he watches. b American Football. An official who marks the distances gained or lost in the progress of the play, keeps the time, and reports to the umpire certain violations of the rules. He has two assistants. c Association Football. An official who assists the referee by noting where the ball crosses the touch line or goal line, etc.
line squall, line thunderstorm. Meteor. A squall or thunderstorm of long front and little breadth.
line'-up', line'up' (lĭn'ŭp'), n. The formation of football players before the start or a restart of play; hence, Colloq., any arrangement of persons (rarely, of things), esp. when having a common purpose or sentiment; as, the line-up at a ticket-office window; the line-up of political factions.
ling (lĭng), n. [Of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. lyng, Dan. lyng, Sw. ljung.] Heather. "Turves and ling." M. Hewlett.
He trod the ling like a buck in spring. Kipling ling (lĭng), n. [ME. lenge; akin to D. leng, G. länge, Dan. lange, Sw. långa, Icel. langa. So named from its being long. See LONG, a.] a A large marine gadoid fish (Molva molva) of northern Europe and Greenland. Valued as food, it is largely salted and dried. b The burbot (Lota maculosa) of Lake Ontario. c An American hake of the genus Urophycis. Canada. d A New Zealand ophidioid food fish (Genypterus blacodes). e Locally, any of various other fishes, as the buffalo cod and sergeant fish.

European Ling (Molva molva).

-ling (-lĭng). [AS. -ling; akin to OHG. -ling, Goth. -liggs.] A noun suffix, commonly having a diminutive or a depreciatory force; as in duck*ling,* gos*ling,* hire*ling,* foster*ling,* first*ling,* under*ling.*
-ling. [AS. -ling, a suffix expressing direction; perh. akin to E. long, a. An adverbial s, orig. a genitive ending, is sometimes added, making -lings.] A suffix used to form adverbs of manner; as, dark*ling,* flat*ling.*
lin'ga (lĭŋ'gȧ), lin'gam (-găm), n. [Skr. liṅga.] The phallic symbol under which Siva is principally worshiped.
lin'gel, lin'gle (lĭŋ'g'l), n. [Cf. L. ligula, lingula, a shoe latchet, ladle, skimmer; dim. fr. lingua tongue.] 1. A little tongue or thong of leather; a lacing for belts.
2. A flat-bladed utensil, as a skimming spoon. Obs.
lin'ger (lĭŋ'gĕr), v. i.; LIN'GERED (-gĕrd); LIN'GER-ING. [Freq. of ME. lengen to tarry, AS. lengan to prolong, put off, fr. lang long. See LONG, a.] 1. To delay; to loiter; to tarry; to remain or wait long; to be slow or reluctant in parting or in quitting anything.
Nor cast one longing, lingering look behind. T. Gray.
Perhaps thou linger'st, in deep thoughts detained. Milton.
2. To be slow to act; to procrastinate; dawdle; hesitate.
Why lingereth she to clothe her heart with love? Tennyson.
3. To remain alive or existent, although suffering, waning, or dying; as, the winter lingered long; old customs linger in quiet places; the wounded man lingered for hours.
I would not have thee linger in thy pain. Shak.
4. To move slowly; to saunter; to be tardy or slow in going or coming; as, they were lingering homeward.
5. To long; crave; hanker; — with after or followed by infinitive. Obs. or Dial. Eng. Oxf. E. D.
Syn. — LINGER, LOITER, LAG. To LINGER is to remain long or to be slow in going, esp. from reluctance to depart; to LOITER is to linger idly or aimlessly, esp. on the way; to LAG is to hang back or linger behind; as, "Vital spark of heavenly flame! quit, oh, quit this mortal frame: trembling, hoping, lingering, flying" (Pope); "But they must go, the time draws on; . . . they rise, but linger" (Tennyson); "There was nothing to do but to eat without being hungry, and loiter about without anything to see" (Jane Austen); "The vocal parts generally lagging a little behind the instrumental, and some loitering fiddles now and then making up for lost time" (Irving). See HESITATE, SAUNTER.
lin'ger, v. t. 1. To protract; to prolong; to draw out; — often with out, forth, etc. Now Rare.
She lingers my desires Shak.
2. To spend or pass in a lingering manner; — often with out; as to linger out one's days on a sick bed.
3. To defer; to put off; to postpone. Obs.
‖ lin'ge-rie' (lăN'zhˈrē'), n. [F.] Linen goods collectively; linen underwear, esp. of women; the clothing of linen and cotton with its lace, etc., worn by a woman.
Ling'ism (lĭng'ĭz'm), n. A mode of treating certain diseases, as obesity, by gymnastics; movement cure; — proposed by Pehr Henrik Ling, a Swede. See KINESIATRICS.
lin'go (lĭŋ'gō), n.; pl. LINGOES (-gōz). [From Pr. lingo, lengo, language, or Pg. lingoa; both fr. L. lingua tongue, language. See LINGUAL.] Language; speech; dialect; — usually a humorous or contemptuous designation of a foreign language or a style of speech strange to the one using the word; as, I understand philosophers' lingo no better than I do Choctaw lingo.
Syn. — See CANT. lin'go, lin'goe (lĭŋ'gō), n. [Cf. F. lingot ingot, slug, lead.] Weaving. Any of a number of pieces of round wire or lead, used to hang at the end of each coupling to keep the twine in tension.
lin'go (lĭŋ'gō), n. [Malay.] A tree of the genus Lingoum, esp. L. indicum, or its wood. India.
Lin-go'um (lĭŋ-gō'ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Malay lingo. See LINGO a tree.] Bot. A genus of fabaceous tropical trees, distinguished by the alternate pinnate leaves, yellow flowers, and large broad legume with membranous-winged margin. Most of the species yield valuable hard wood, which in some cases affords a red dye. Some produce kino. Among the important species are L. ernaceum, the African rosewood or molompi; L. marsupium, the Amboyna kino or bija; and L. santalinum, the red sandalwood. See KINO, AFRICAN ROSEWOOD, etc.
lin'gua (lĭŋ'gwa), n.; L. pl. LINGUÆ (-gwē). [L., the tongue.] A tongue or tonguelike organ; specif., Zoöl. Entomol. a The glossa b The proboscis of a butterfly or moth. c See HYPOPHARYNX.
lin'gua-den'tal (lĭŋ'gwa-dĕn'tăl), a. & n. [L. lingua tongue + E. dental.] Phon. Dentilingual.
lin'gua fran'ca (lĭŋ'gwa frăn'ka). [It., prop., language of the Franks.] a A hybrid language used by the Latin races in intercourse with Greeks, North Africans, and Orientals. b Any hybrid or other language used over a wide area as a common or commercial tongue among peoples of different speech.
lin'gual (lĭŋ'gwăl), a. [L. lingua tongue. See TONGUE; cf. LANGUAGE.] Of or pertaining to the tongue or a tonguelike organ or part; glossal; tonguelike; specif., Phon., formed with the aid of the tongue; — applied esp. to the dentals, as t, d, n, and to the cerebrals.
lingual artery, Anat., an artery arising from the external carotid, between the superior thyroid and facial arteries, and supplying the tongue, within which it continues, as the ranine artery, to the tip. — l. bone, the hyoid bone. — l. gyrus, l. lobule. = SUBCALCARINE CONVOLUTION. — l. nerve, any nerve supplying the tongue, esp. the gustatory nerve (which see). — l. ribbon, Zoöl., the radula of a mollusk.
lin'gual, n. A lingual sound or letter.
‖ lin-gua'lis (lĭŋ-gwā'lĭs), a. & n. Anat. Latin form of LINGUAL, designating esp. the intrinsic muscles of the tongue considered collectively as constituting one muscle.
Lin'gua-tu'li-da (lĭŋ'gwȧ-tū'lĭ-dȧ), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. lingua tongue; cf. linguatus gifted with a tongue, eloquent, linguatulus somewhat eloquent.] Zoöl. A group of wormlike, degraded, parasitic arthropods, regarded sometimes as a distinct class, sometimes as an order of the Arachnida. The body of the adult is superficially annulated, and may become three or four inches long. The only appendages are two pairs of hooks near the mouth. The larvæ have two pairs of short legs and live in the bodies of herbivorous animals, as hares and rabbits. The adults live in the frontal or maxillary sinuses of dogs or wolves, or in the lungs of snakes which feed upon the infested animals. The group consists of one genus, Pentastomum, syn. Lin-guat'u-la (lĭŋ-gwăt'ū-lȧ). — lin-guat'u-loid (-loid), a.

lin'gui-form (lĭŋ'gwĭ-fôrm), a. [L. lingua tongue + -form.] Having the form of the tongue; tongue-shaped.
lin'guist (-gwĭst), n. [L. lingua tongue, speech, language: cf. F. linguiste.] 1. A master of the use of language; a talker. Obs. J. Webster.
2. A person skilled in languages, esp. living languages.
There too were Gibbon, the greatest historian, and Jones, the greatest linguist, of the age Macaulay
3. An interpreter. Obs. or Local.
lin-guis'tic (lĭŋ-gwĭs'tĭk) } a. [Cf. F. linguistique.] Of lin-guis'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } or pert. to language or the knowledge or study of languages; relating to linguistics, or to the affinities of languages. — linguistic area, the area over which any linguistic or phonetic law holds good.
lin-guis'tics (-tĭks), n. [Cf. F. linguistique.] The science of languages, or of the origin, signification, and application of words; glossology.
lin'gu-la (lĭŋ'gŭ-lȧ), n.; L. pl. -LÆ (-lē). [L., a little tongue.] 1. Anat. & Zoöl. A tonguelike process or part; as: a A ridge of bone in the angle between the body and the greater wing of the sphenoid. b A tonguelike prominence of the vermiform process of the cerebellum on the dorsal surface of the valve of Vieussens.
2. [cap.] A genus of lyopomatous brachiopods having a thin, nearly equivalve, spatulate shell attached by its narrow or hinge end to a flexible, extensile, tubular stalk. The genus has existed since the Ordovician, and closely related though now extinct genera, as Lin'gu-lel'la (-lĕl'ȧ), occur in the Lower Cambrian. The living species form a vertical tube in sand in which the stalk is fixed.

shell (Fasciolaria distans), of Florida and the West Indies. It is marked by narrow, dark, spiral lines. [NATE, n., 2.
line coördinates. See COÖRDINATE.
line drawing. Drawing done with a pointed instrument, as a pen or pencil.
line equation. An equation connecting line coördinates.
line filling. An ornamental figure or flourish filling up an incomplete line of writing or printing. [Obs. or R.
line firing. Mil. Volley firing.
line fish. Any fish which is captured by hook and line.
line fisherman. One who engages in line fishing.
line hunting. Following game by scent alone. — line hunter.
lin'e-i-form' (lĭn'ē-ĭ-fôrm'), a. [line + -form.] Linear in shape or form; composed of lines.
line integral. See INTEGRAL.
line'less, a. See -LESS.
line'let, n. See -LET.
lin'en-ar'mor-er, -ar'mour-er, n. A maker of garments, esp. of linen, worn with armor; hence, a tailor. Obs. or Hist. — lin'en-ar'mor-ess, -ar'mour-ess, n.
linen decency. Commonplace and prosperous conventionality as symbolized by fine linen, such as the stiff and elaborate collars of the Stuart period. Milton.
lin'en-er, n. A dealer in linen; a linen draper or shirt maker. Obs lin'en-ette' (lĭn'ĕn-ĕt'), n. [linen + -ette.] A kind of cotton fabric made in imitation of linen.
linen floss. = FLOSS THREAD.
linen hall. A hall where linen goods are sold. Obs.
lin'en-less, a. See -LESS.
lin'en-man', n. A linener. Obs.
linen panel. Wood Carving. A panel containing a linen fold.
linen pattern. = LINEN FOLD.
linen scroll. = LINEN FOLD.
lin'e-o-cir'cu-lar (lĭn'ē-ō-sûr'kū-lăr), a. Converting linear and circular motions into each other; — said of a straight-line motion.
line officer. See LINE, n., 17 g. lin'e-o-graph' (lĭn'ē-ō-grăf'), n. [L. linea line + -graph.] A kind of instrument for drawing lines.
lin'e-oid (-oid), n. [line + -oid.] Math. An ordinary three-dimensional space, conceived as immersed in a four-dimensional space. [eolate.]
lin'e-o-lat'ed (-ō-lāt'ĕd), a. Lineolate. — line'-out', n. Rugby Football. The formation of the players as lined up for play. Eng.
line pin. Bricklaying. A pin to support a mason's guiding lines by which he aligns his work.
lin'er (līn'ĕr), v. t. Shipbuilding. To strengthen with liners.
line'-rid'ing (-rīd'ĭng), n. See to ride the line, under RIDE, v. t.
line rocket. A rocket so connected with a line or wire as to run along it when discharged line series. A single system of lines; a system having only one parameter; a regulus; a skew.
line singularity. A singularity characterizing a curve as an envelope of lines.
line spectrum. See SPECTRUM. line storm. An equinoctial storm New Eng. [GARETH.]
Li-ne'ŏ' (lĭ-nā'ŏ'), n. See LINNET. lin'et (lĭn'ĕt). Obs. or dial. Eng. var. of LINT.
line trotter. A horse whose hind and fore feet in trotting are in the same line.
line weaver. Any of various sedentary spiders which spin irregular webs in which the threads cross in all directions. In some classifications they constitute a tribe, Retitelæ.
line'work' (līn'wûrk'), n. Line drawing or engraving.
lin'ey (lĭn'ĭ). Var. of LINY.
ling. + LENG, v., LINE.
ling, n. [Chin. *ling*2.] The water chestnut or its edible fruit. China.
lin'ga sa-rī'ra (lĭŋ'gȧ sȧ-rē'-rȧ). [Skr. liṅgaçarīra.] Theos. The astral body, which is created before, and is disintegrated after, the physical body.
Lin-ga'yat (lĭŋ-gä'yăt), n. [Kanarese liṅga-āyata.] One of a Hindu caste originally a reform sect of Sivaites, mostly in western and southern India ling'ber-ry, n. Dial. Eng. a The fruit of the ling. b The mountain cranberry. c The bog strawberry. d The bilberry. e The partridge berry (Mitchella repens). f The crowberry g.
ling bird. The meadow pipit. Local, Eng.
linge (dial. lĭnzh), v. t. [Cf. F. dial. lincher to strike with a whip.] To cudgel; thrash; flog Obs. or Scot. & Dial. Eng.
lin'gel. lin'gle (lĭŋ'g'l), n. [F. lignerl, dim. of L. linea a linen thread.] A shoemaker's thread. Obs. or Dial.
lin'gel (lĭŋ'g'l; lĭng''l), v. t. [See LINGEL a thong.] To fasten, or buckle, as with a thong. Scot. [A incture. Obs.] lin'gence, n. [L. lingere to lick.] lin'ger, n. Lingering Obs.
lin'ger-er, n. One that lingers.
lin'ger-ing, p. pr. & vb. n. of LINGER. — lin'ger-ing-ly, adv.
lin'get (lĭn'ĕt), n. [Cf. LINT.] Linseed. Obs. Scot.
ling honey. Wild honey, from ling, or heather.
lin'gle. Var. of LINGEL.
lin-go'a wood (lĭŋ-gō'ȧ). [Malay lengkok.] Amboyna wood.
lin'got (lĭŋ'gŭt), n [F., prob for lingot the ingot, fr. English. See INGOT.] An ingot of metal; also, the mold in which it is cast. Obs. or Archaic.
ling pink. = LING.
ling'ster (lĭng'stĕr). Var of LINGUISTER.
ling'thorn' (-thôrn'), n. [Etym. of 1st part uncertain.] A European deep-water starfish (Luidia fragilissima).
ling'tow', n. [Cf. Scot ling line, F. ligne.] Archaic. Scot. A rope used by smugglers for packing burdens. — ling'tow'man, n.
lin-gua'cious (lĭŋ-gwā'shŭs), a. [L. linguax, -acis, loquacious, fr. lingua tongue.] Loquacious. Obs. — lin-gua'cious-ness, n. Obs.
lin'gua-form (lĭn'gwȧ-fôrm), a. Bot. & Zool. Linguiform.
‖ Lin'gua in'ter-na'tio-na'l' (lĭŋ-gwa ĭn'tĕr-nat'shŭ-năl'). See UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE.
lin-gua'le (lĭŋ-gwā'lē), n. [NL. os linguale. See LINGUAL, a.] Craniol The upper end of the inner side of the symphysis of the jaw.
lin-gual'i-ty (-gwăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. Quality of being lingual.
lin'gual-ize (lĭŋ'gwăl-īz), v. t. Phon To make lingual; to change into a lingual.
lin'gual-ly, adv. of LINGUAL.
lin'gua-na'sal (lĭŋ'gw ȧ-n ā'zăl), a [L. lingua tongue + E. nasal.] Phon. Combining lingual and nasal pronunciation, as the sound of n. — n. A linguanasal consonant.
‖ lin'gua to-ca'na in boc'ca to-ma'na (lĭŋ'gwȧ tō-kā'nȧ ĭn bŏk'kȧ rō-mā'nȧ) [It.] The Tuscan tongue in the Roman mouth; — proverbially designating the best spoken Italian
lin'guet (lĭŋ'gwĕt), n. A linguet. lin'gui-den'tal (lĭŋ'gwĭ-dĕn'tăl), a. & n. Linguadental.
lin'guist, lin'guished, a. Accomplished in languages. Obs.
lin'guist-er, n. Also ling'ster. [linguist + -er.] An interpreter; a linguist. Obs. or Local, U. S lin-guis'tic, n. Linguistics.
lin-guis'ti-cal-ly, adv. of LINGUISTIC. See -LY.
lin'guist-ry, n. [linguist + -ry.] Knowledge, or study, of languages Rare.

Lingula flags. Geol. A group of slates, flags, and sandstones of the Upper Cambrian of Wales. Some of the layers contain vast numbers of a species of Lingula.

lin'gu-late (lĭng'gū-lāt), lin'gu-lat'ed (-lāt'ĕd), a. [L. lingulatus, fr. lingula a little tongue. Cf. LIGULATE.] Shaped like the tongue or like a strap; ligulate.

ling'y (lĭng'ĭ), a. Covered with, abounding in, or resembling, ling, or heather; heathy; heathery.

lin'i-ment (lĭn'ĭ-mĕnt), n. [L. linimentum, fr. linire, linere, to besmear, anoint: cf. F. liniment. Cf. LIME a viscous substance.] A liquid or semiliquid preparation of a consistence thinner than an ointment, applied to the skin by friction, esp. one used as a sedative or a stimulant.

li'nin (lī'nĭn), n. [See LINUM.] 1. Chem. A bitter white crystallizable substance, with purgative qualities, derived from the purging flax (Linum catharticum).

2. Biol. The substance of the achromatic fibrous network of a cell nucleus. The chromatin granules are interspersed through it.

lin'ing (līn'ĭng), n. [See LINE to cover the inside.] 1. That which covers, or lines, the inner surface of anything, as of a garment or a box; also, the contents of anything.

> There does a sable cloud
> Turn forth her silver lining on the night Milton

2. Naut. Extra canvas sewed on a part of a sail exposed to chafing; — called also lining cloth.

3. Act of one who lines; act or process of inserting, or providing, a lining.

4. pl Underclothes, esp. drawers. Dial. Eng. Oxf. E. D.

5. A kind of Babbitt metal (which see).

lin'ing (līn'ĭng), n. [See LINE, v., to mark with a line.] 1. An arrangement in a line or lines; alignment. Obs. or R.

2. In Scotland, fixing of boundaries of estates in a burgh by the lines; also, the erection or alteration of a building by permission of a dean of guild.

3. Act or process of lining; specif.: a Marking or tracing lines on a surface. b Line fishing. c Measuring, fitting, or laying in place by means of a guiding line. d Reading a line or two of a hymn, etc., preparatory to its being sung.

lining bar. Railroads. Any of several kinds of crowbar; esp., one in which the working end is of square section and whose "point" is in the form of an oblique pyramid with its apex in one of the sides of the bar.

lining sight. Mining Surv. An instrument consisting essentially of a plate with a longitudinal slot in the middle, and the means of suspending it vertically. It is used in conjunction with a plumb line for directing the courses of underground drifts, headings, etc.

link (lĭngk), n. [Orig. uncert.; perh corrupted fr. the first part of linstock.] 1. A torch made of tow and pitch, or the like. "Give me the loan of the link, Dick." Stevenson.

2. A linkboy. Rare.

3. A kind of blacking. Obs.

link, n. [Cf. LINCH.] 1. A bank or ridge. Obs. or Dial.

2. pl. Sand hills with the surrounding level or undulating land, as along the seashore. Scot.

> Golf may be played on any park or common, but its original home is the "links" or common land which is found by the seashore, where the short close turf, the sandy subsoil, and the many natural obstacles in the shape of bents, whins, sand holes, and banks, supply the conditions which are essential to the proper pursuit of the game. Encyc of Sport

3. pl. [Sometimes construed as a singular.] A tract of ground laid out for the game of golf; a golf course. Lining Sight.

link, n. [ME. linke, of Scand. origin; cf. Sw. länk ring of a chain, Dan. lænke chain, Icel. hlekkr; akin to AS. hlence a link of a coat of mail, G. gelenk joint, link, ring of a chain, lenken to bend.] 1. A single ring or division of a chain; specif., one of the links of a surveyor's chain used as a measure of length, 7.92 inches. See CHAIN, n., 5.

2. Hence, something which binds together, or connects, separate things; a part of a connected series; a tie; a bond. "The link of brotherhood." Cowper.

3. Anything analogous to a link of a chain in form, function, or arrangement; specif.: a A sausage or pudding as a division of a chain; pl., a chain or chains of sausages, etc. Colloq. or Dial. b A section of fishing line. c A winding of a river or watercourse; also, the ground along such a winding; a meander; — usually in pl. Scot.

d Mach. Any intermediate rod or piece for transmitting force or motion; esp, a short connecting rod with a hole or pin at each end; specif., Steam Engine, the slotted bar to the opposite ends of which the eccentric rods in a link motion are jointed. See LINK MOTION. e Kinematics. A constructive part of a mechanism, having at least two elements belonging to different pairs. See CHAIN, n., 8. f Chem. = BOND, 9. g A small chip of silver solder.

link (lĭngk), v. t.; LINKED (lĭngkt); LINK'ING. To connect or unite with or as with a link; to join; attach; couple. to link up, Mach., to change the gear of (a steam engine) by pushing over the hand lever of the link motion or valve gear. — linked regiments, Mil., in the British service, two regiments, or two battalions, of the regular army which are associated together in a military district, one usually serving at home while the other is abroad. — linked vein, Geol., a steplike vein in which the ore follows one fissure for a certain distance, then passes by a cross fissure to another nearly parallel, and so on. S. F. Emmons.

link, v. i. To be connected, coupled, or joined.

> No one generation could link with the other. Burke.

link'age (lĭngk'ĕj), n. 1. Act of linking, or state of being linked; also, a system of links.

2. Chem. Manner of linking or of being linked, — said of the union of atoms or radicals in the molecule.

3. a Mech. Any system of links or bars jointed together and more or less constrained by having a link or links fixed, by means of which straight or approximately straight lines, or other point paths, may be traced. A linkage is said to be complete when the motion is completely defined; primary, secondary, etc., when it has one, two, etc., degrees of freedom respectively more than this; and plane or solid according as the movement is in a plane or in space. See STRAIGHT-LINE MOTION. b Geom. An ideal conception of points and lines in a plane or in space, representing the foregoing, designed to trace loci by arbitrary movements.

4. Elec. The linking together of magnetic lines of force and the coils or turns of the conductor through which they pass. The number of linkages (called also flux turns) is the product of the magnetic flux by the number of turns.

link block. Steam Engine. In a link motion, the block which slides in or on the link and carries the pin from which the valve rod is worked.

link'boy' (lĭngk'boi') } n. [See 1st LINK.] A boy or man link'man (-măn) } that carries a link, or torch, to light passengers.

link motion. 1. Mach. A kind of valve gear or reversing gear for a steam engine, in which the valve rod is connected to a block (called the link block) capable of sliding in a slotted link controlled by a system of links, two eccentrics, and a drag link. The original and still commonest variety is Stephenson's link motion (stē'vĕnsŭn), in which the slotted link forms a circular arc equal or nearly equal in radius to the length of the attached eccentric rods. The position of the slotted link is determined by a drag link worked by a hand lever which can be fixed in any position on a notched arc (hence the expression to link up or notch up). The engine is in full forward gear, or full backward gear (and thus reversed in direction), according as the slotted link is pulled clear over one way or the other (see in full gear, under FULL, a.). When the link is in mid position neither eccentric operates and the engine stops. For intermediate positions the valve rod is influenced by both eccentrics; and the point of cut-off, and therefore the speed of the engine, can be varied at will. The eccentric rods may be open (see Illust.) or crossed. Gooch's link motion (gōōch'ĭz) has a curved link convex towards the eccentric rods to suit the length of the radius rod connecting it to the valve rod, the gear being changed by raising or lowering this rod, keeping the lead constant for all gears. Allan's link motion uses a straight link, and the gear is changed by moving the link and also a radius rod. Many similar gears without slotted links, properly called radial gears, are sometimes called link motions. See VALVE GEAR.

Link Motion 1 Stephenson's, 2 Gooch's, and 3 Allan's Link Motions, all shown in mid gear. AA Eccentrics; BB Eccentric Rods, C Link; D Link Block; E Valve Rod; F Slide Valve shown partly broken away to expose G, the Steam and Exhaust Ports. H A common arrangement of Hand Lever and Notch

2. Geom. A complete linkage.

link'work' (lĭngk'wûrk'), n. 1. A fabric of links of metal or other material fastened together; also, a chain.

> And thou shalt make hooks of gold, and two chains of fine gold; linkwork and wreathed. Udall

2. a Mech. Mechanism in which links, or intermediate connecting pieces, are employed to transmit motion from one part to another. b Geom. A linkage.

linn (lĭn), n. [Ir. linn, or Gael. linne; akin to W. llyn a pool, pond, lake, but in senses 2 and 3 prob. from AS. hlynn torrent.] Chiefly Scot. 1. A pool or collection of water, particularly one above or below a fall of water.

2. A waterfall, or cataract; as, a roaring linn.

3. A steep ravine; a precipice.

Lin-næ'a (lĭ-nē'ȧ). [NL., named by Gronovius after Linnæus.] Bot. A monotypic genus of caprifoliaceous plants having trailing stems, small evergreen leaves, and nodding pink flowers with a tubular-campanulate corolla, borne in pairs at the summits of erect peduncles. L. borealis, the twinflower, is found in the colder parts of the temperate zone. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

Twinflower (Linnæa borealis).

Lin-næ'an, Lin-ne'an (lĭ-nē'ăn), a. Pert. to, or after the method of, Carl Linné, Latinized Linnæus (1707–78), the celebrated Swedish naturalist who established the system of binomial nomenclature (see NOMENCLATURE).

Linnæan classification, Bot., the system of classification proposed by Linnæus in his "Systema Naturæ" (1735), and thenceforward adopted as the standard by botanists until the ultimate establishment of the natural system founded by Jussieu in 1789. All plants were divided by Linnæus into 24 classes, of which the first twenty were based on the number or arrangement of the stamens; the next three classes included plants having monœcious, diœcious, and polygamo-diœcious flowers respectively; while the last class included all known cryptogams. These classes were again divided into orders, based on characters taken from the gynœcium or the fruit. This system is known as artificial, because it gives no clew to the relationship of species or genera, but merely affords a key to their rapid determination. Being based almost exclusively on the sporophylls (formerly thought to be sexual organs), it has also been called the sexual system. Other artificial systems of classification were proposed before the time of Linnæus, but none were so extensively adopted. — Linnæan system. Bot. = LINNÆAN CLASSIFICATION.

lin-næ'ite (lĭ-nē'īt), n. [See LINNÆAN.] Min. A mineral of pale steel-gray color and metallic luster, occurring in isometric crystals, and also massive. It is essentially a sulphide of cobalt, Co_3S_4. H., 5.5. Sp. gr., 4.8-5.

lin'net (lĭn'ĕt; -ĭt; 151), n. [OF. linette, F. linot, linotte, fr. L. linum flax; — so called because it feeds on the seeds of flax and hemp. See LINEN.] a A common small finch (Linota cannabina), of the Old World, the male of which, in summer plumage, is chestnut brown with the forehead, fore neck, and breast crimson and the belly buffy white. Its plumage varies greatly according to age, sex, and season, sometimes being pied or nearly white, and various names are applied to these phases, as gray linnet, red linnet, etc. With qualifying terms, the name is extended to species of the related genera Acanthis, Chrysomatris, and Chloris; as, the redpoll linnet, pine linnet, green linnet, etc. b The house finch. Local, Western U. S.

li-no'le-ate (lĭ-nō'lē-āt), n. A salt or ester of linoleic acid.

lin'o-le'ic (lĭn'ō-lē'ĭk; lĭ-nō'lē-ĭk), a. Chem. Designating an unsaturated acid, $C_{17}H_{31}{\cdot}CO_2H$, a thin yellow oil, occurring in the form of its glyceryl ester in various drying oils, as those of linseed, poppy, hemp, and certain nuts.

li-no'le-in (-ĭn), n. The glyceryl ester of linoleic acid.

lin'o-len'ic (lĭn'ō-lĕn'ĭk), a. [*linole*ic + (n) + -ic.] Org Chem. Pertaining to or designating an unsaturated acid, $C_{17}H_{29}CO_2H$, accompanying linoleic acid in drying oils.

li-no'le-um (lĭ-nō'lē-ŭm), n. [L. linum flax + oleum oil.] 1. Linseed oil brought to various degrees of hardness by some oxidizing process, as by exposure to heated air, or by treatment with chloride of sulphur, and used as a substitute for India rubber, as a cement, etc.

2. A kind of floor cloth made by laying hardened linseed oil mixed with ground cork on a canvas backing.

lin'o-type (lĭn'ō-tīp'; lĭn'ō-), n. [See 3d LINE; TYPE.] Print. a A kind of typesetting machine which produces castings, each of which corresponds to a line of separate types. By pressing upon keys like those of a typewriter the matrices for one line are properly arranged; the stereotype, or slug, is then cast and planed, and the matrices are returned to their proper places, the whole process being automatic. b The slug produced by the above machine, or matter composed in such lines. — lin'o-typ'ist (-tīp'ĭst), n.

Lin'sang (lĭn'săng), n. [Jav. lingsang.] a Zool. A genus (called also Prionodon) of long-tailed viverrine mammals of catlike habits, inhabiting southern Asia and the East Indies, differing from the civets and genets in the absence of the second upper molar. The species are variously marked with black on a whitish or yellowish ground color. b [l. c.] An animal of this genus or of the related African genus Poiana, containing only P. poensis.

lin'seed' (lĭn'sēd'), n. [AS. linsǣd. See LINEN; SEED.] The seeds of flax; flaxseed.

linseed cake. The solid mass or cake which remains when oil is expressed from flaxseed.

linseed meal. Linseed cake reduced to powder.

linseed oil. A yellowish drying oil expressed from flaxseed. Sp. gr., .931–.937. It is the most important oil for painting, and is used also in making printer's ink, linoleum, etc., and in medicine as a laxative. In painting it is used either raw or boiled. See BOILED OIL; OIL, Table I. linseed-oil cacutchouc. = LINOLEUM, 1.

Lion. (1/40)

It is distinguished by the shaggy blackish or brownish mane of the male, the tufted tail, and the plain tawny yellowish body color. On account of its large size, imposing appearance, and legendary history, it has long been called king of beasts. The average lion is eight to ten feet long from tip of nose to tip of tail, but individuals measuring nearly eleven feet are recorded, which is slightly less than the largest tigers. Lions are chiefly nocturnal, and never climb trees, but habitually lie in wait for their prey, which consists largely of antelopes and other herbivorous animals. They will also attack human beings and sometimes contract the "man-eating" habit. They breed well in captivity.

2. Phon. To palatalize. Cf. MOUILLÉ

liq'ue-fy, v. i. 1. To become reduced to the liquid state.
2. To dissolve (in a liquid). Obs.
3. To drink liquor. Jocular.

li-ques'cent (lĭ-kwĕs'ĕnt), a. [L. liquescens, p. pr. of liquescere to become liquid, incho. fr. liquere to be liquid.] Becoming, or tending to become, liquid; melting. — li-ques'cence (-ĕns), li-ques'cen-cy (-ĕn-sĭ), n.

li'queur' (lē'kûr'; lĭ-kûr'), n. [F. See LIQUOR.] 1. A spirituous liquor flavored with various aromatic substances and usually sweetened. Liqueurs are usually made by steeping the flavoring material in the spirit, and afterward distilling. They were originally prepared for medicinal use, but are now chiefly used as beverages.
2. An alcoholic sirup, as that added to champagne during the process of manufacture.

li'queur' (lē'kûr'; lĭ-kûr'), v. t.; LI'QUEURED' (lē'kûrd'; lĭ-kûrd'); LI'QUEUR'ING. To treat or mix with a liqueur.

liq'uid (lĭk'wĭd), a. [L. liquidus, fr. liquere to be fluid or liquid.] 1. Flowing freely like water; fluid; not solid.
The plane and liquid water which will receive no step. Tyndale.
2. Physics. Characterized by free movement of the constituent molecules among themselves, but without the tendency to separate from one another characteristic of gases; neither solid nor gaseous; as, liquid mercury; liquid state.
3. Flowing or sounding smoothly or without abrupt transitions or harsh tones. "Liquid melody." Crashaw. Specif.: Phon. Of consonant sounds, free from any abruptness or harshness, smooth; flowing; vowel-like, as the sounds of l and r.
In many open voiced consonants there is no audible friction, and such "vowel-like" or "liquid" consonants have quite the effect of vowels. H. Sweet.
4. Of assets, securities, etc., such as are cash, or as can be promptly converted into cash.
5. Fluid and transparent; as, the liquid air.
6. Clear; definite in terms or amount, as a document; specif., of a debt, account, or the like, made certain by agreement or written acknowledgment or by decree of the court; hence, of or pertaining to such a debt or account. Obs., except in Scots Law and Roman-Dutch Law, etc.; as, a liquid case; a liquid proof of a demand.
Mutual debts cancel one another, when they are of a liquid description, i. e., of a readily calculable kind. G. T. Morice.
Syn. — See FLUID.
liquid air, air in the liquid state. It is a transparent, limpid, and intensely cold liquid, slightly blue in color and of about the same density as water, and is prepared by subjecting air to great pressure and then cooling it by its own expansion to a temperature below the boiling point of its constituents (nitrogen, —194° C.; oxygen, —183° C.). Its chief use is as a refrigerant. — l. compass, a compass in which the card and magnets rest on a pivot in a bowl filled with liquid (alcohol and water). The bowl is tight and fitted with an expansion chamber so that it is filled with the liquid at all temperatures. The card is fitted with an air chamber which reduces the weight on the pivot to a minimum (60 to 100 grains). — l. crystal. = CRYSTAL, 5. — l. glass. = WATER GLASS. — l. glue. See GLUE. — l. measure, the measurement of liquids, or a unit or system for such measurement. In Great Britain and the United States, 4 gills make 1 pint, 2 pints make 1 quart, 4 quarts make 1 gallon. See GALLON. See also METRIC SYSTEM. — l. storax. a See STORAX, 2. b See LIQUIDAMBAR, 2.

liq'uid, n. 1. A substance in the liquid state. Liquids differ from gases in being only slightly compressible, and in being incapable of indefinite expansion. They differ from solids in the ease with which their particles move upon one another, causing them to adapt themselves to the shape of the containing vessel. Some liquids are very viscous, however, and no sharp line can be drawn between liquids and solids. Liquid and fluid are terms often used synonymously, but fluid has the broader signification, including both liquids and gases.
2. Phon. A consonant having a smooth, flowing, or vowel-like sound. The term is indefinite, by some limited to l and r, by others to l, r, m, n, while others make it still more inclusive. Cf. LIQUID, a., 3.

liq'ui-am'bar (lĭk'wĭ-ăm'bär; as Lat. -bär), n. [NL. See LIQUID; AMBER.] 1. Bot. A genus of hamamelidaceous trees having heads of small monœcious flowers succeeded by a globose fruit composed of many woody carpels. L. styraciflua is the North American sweet gum, and L. orientalis is found in Asia Minor. Also [l. c.], any tree of this genus.
2. [l. c.] A yellowish fragrant balsamic liquid exuding from the trunk of Liquidambar styraciflua; — called also erroneously liquid storax, which it resembles, and for which it is often substituted.

liq'ui-date (lĭk'wĭ-dāt), v. t.; LIQ'UI-DAT'ED (-dāt'ĕd); LIQ'UI-DAT'ING (-dāt'ĭng). [LL. liquidatus, p. p. of liquidare to liquidate, fr. L. liquidus liquid, clear. See LIQUID.] 1. Law. To determine by agreement or by litigation the precise amount of (indebtedness or damages); or, where there is an indebtedness to more than one person, to determine the precise amount of (each indebtedness); to make the amount of (an indebtedness or damages) clear and certain, or to settle the data from which it may be calculated.
A debt or demand is liquidated whenever the amount due is agreed on by the parties, or fixed by the operation of law. 15 Ga. Rep. 321
2. To discharge; to pay off, as an indebtedness.
Friburg was ceded to Zurich by Sigismund to liquidate a debt of a thousand florins. W. Coxe.
3. To ascertain the amount, or the several amounts, of the liabilities of (a corporation, an estate, etc.) and apportion the assets toward the discharge of the indebtedness, as in winding up a corporation; to settle the accounts and distribute the assets of (a corporation or estate) in the process of winding up, esp. through a receiver or trustee.
4. To make clear and intelligible.
Time only can liquidate the meaning of all parts of a compound system. A. Hamilton.

Hence: a Literally so termed; so called without inaccuracy; as, a literal transformation; the literal destruction of an army. b True to the fact; not exaggerated or embellished; as, a literal description. c Giving a strict or literal construction; unimaginative; matter-of-fact; — applied to persons.
3. Of translations, transcriptions, etc., representing or following the letter or exact words; not free.
A middle course between the rigor of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrasts. Hooker.
4. Of or pertaining to, consisting of, or expressed by, letters, or alphabetic characters; as, a literal error, as one due to a fault in transcription, printing, or the like; a literal, as distinguished from a numerical, notation.
The literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the ciphers. Johnson.
5. Consisting of writing; written; as, a literal contract.
6. Of or pertaining to letters; literary; epistolary. Obs.
literal contract, Law, a contract fully evidenced by writing; — said in Roman law of the contract evidenced by an expensilation or by syngraphs or chirographs. — l. equation, Math., an equation expressing some or all of the known quantities by letters; — disting. from a numerical equation.

lit'er-al-ism (-ĭz'm), n. Practice or theory of following the letter, or literal sense, or the tendency to adopt literal interpretations; hence, Fine Arts, extreme realism in portrayal. — lit'er-al-ist, n. — lit'er-al-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a lit'er-al'i-ty (-ȧl'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). State or quality of being literal; also, a literal meaning or interpretation.

lit'er-al-ize (lĭt'ẽr-ȧl-īz), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). To make literal; to interpret or put in practice according to the literal meaning. — lit'er-al-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ĭ-zā'-), n. — lit'er-al-iz'er (-īz'ẽr), n.

lit'er-al-ly, adv. of LITERAL. Esp.: a According to the primary and natural import of words; not figuratively; as, a man and his wife cannot be literally one flesh; — often used hyperbolically; as, he literally flew. b With close adherence to words; word by word.
So wild a poet cannot be translated literally. Dryden.

lit'er-a-ry (lĭt'ẽr-ȧ-rĭ), a. [L. litterarius, literarius, fr. littera, litera, a letter: cf. F. littéraire. See LETTER.] 1. Of or pertaining to letters, or literature (often esp. belles-lettres); pertaining to learning, esp. as transmitted by books and writings, or learned men; as, literary fame; a literary history; literary conversation.
2. Versed in, or acquainted with, literature; occupied with literature as a profession; connected with literature or with men of letters; as, a literary man.
In the literary as well as fashionable world. Mason.
3. = LITERAL, a., 4, 6. Obs.
literary language or dialect, a language or dialect used mainly or characteristically in written expression and differing more or less in diction, idiom, or construction from the vernacular; also, a language having a literature. — l. property, property which is constituted by the right of an author or those who claim under him to the enjoyment and use of his literary productions to the exclusion of others. Cf. COPYRIGHT.

lit'er-ate (-ĭt), a. [L. litteratus, literatus. See LETTER.] 1. Instructed in letters; educated; specif., able to read and write.
2. Pertaining to, or learned in, literature; literary.

lit'er-ate, n. 1. A learned or literary person.
2. One who can read and write.
3. Church of Eng. One admitted to holy orders without having a university degree.

‖ lit'e-ra'ti (lĭt/ẽ-rā'tī), n. pl. Men of letters. See LITERATUS.

lit'er-a'tor (lĭt'ẽr-ā'tẽr), n. [L. litterator, literator. See LETTER.] 1. A smatterer; a sciolist. Obs.
2. A literary man, esp. a critic; a littérateur.
3. One devoted to bibliography, textual criticism, etc. R.

lit'er-a-ture (lĭt'ẽr-ȧ-tūr), n. [F. littérature, L. litteratura, literatura, learning, grammar, writing, fr. littera, litera, letter. See LETTER.] 1. Literary culture; acquaintance with letters; "book knowledge." Now Rare.
He [Milton's father] had probably more than common literature. Johnson.
2. Production of literary work, esp. as an occupation.
Literature is a very bad crutch, but a very good walking stick. Lamb.
3. Literary productions as a collective body; specif.: a The total of preserved writings belonging to a given language or people. b The class or the total of writings, as of a given country or period, which is notable for literary form or expression, as distinguished, on the one hand, from works merely technical or erudite, and, on the other, from journalistic or other ephemeral literary writing; belles-lettres. c The body of writings having to do with a given subject; as, philosophical literature; chemical literature.
4. Music. The aggregate of compositions for any particular instrument or group of instruments; as, the literature of the organ or of the string quartet.
5. Any kind of printed matter, as advertising matter. Colloq. or Cant.

Syn. — LITERATURE, BELLES-LETTRES. LITERATURE is now used chiefly of writings distinguished by artistic form or emotional appeal; as, "Literature consists of all the books . . . where moral truth and human passion are touched with a certain largeness, sanity, and attraction of form" (J. Morley); "Such is the matter of imaginative or artistic literature — this transcript, not of mere fact, but of fact in its infinite variety, as modified by human preference in all its infinitely varied forms" (W. Pater). But the word is often applied to the whole body of writings on a particular subject, without regard to their literary excellence. BELLES-LETTRES emphasizes the purely æsthetic aspects of literature. See SCIENCE.

‖ lit'e-ra'tus (lĭt'ẽ-rā'tŭs), n.; pl. -TI (-tī). [L. litteratus, literatus] A man of letters; an erudite or learned person; — chiefly in pl.
Now we are to consider that our bright ideal of a literatus may chance to be maimed. De Quincey.

lith (lĭth), n. [AS. lið. Cf. LIMB.] Archaic or Scot. & Dial. Eng. a A joint or limb; a member; — often in the phrase lith and limb. b A division or segment, as of an orange. c A ring around the base of a cow's horn. Scot.

-lith (-lĭth). [Cf. F. -lithe.] A suffix from Greek λίθος, stone. Cf. -LITE.

li-thæ'mi-a, li-the'mi-a (lĭ-thē'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; lithic + -æmia.] Med. A condition in which uric (lithic) acid is present in the blood. — li-thæ'mic, li-the'mic (-mĭk), a.

lith'an'ode (lĭth'ȧn'ōd), n. [litho- + anode.] Lead dioxide in porous, coherent masses, used in storage batteries.

lith'arge (lĭth'ärj), n. [ME. litarge, F. litharge, L. lithargyrus, Gr. λιθάργυρος, the scum or foam of silver; λίθος stone + ἄργυρος silver. Litharge is found in silver-bearing lead ore.] A yellowish red substance, obtained in hard or scaly crystalline masses by heating lead moderately, in presence of air or by calcining lead nitrate or carbonate. It is sold in the form of flakes or powder, and is used in making flint glass, in glazing earthenware, in preparing compounds of lead, in drying oils, etc. Chemically, litharge has the same composition as massicot, both being lead monoxide, PbO. The difference between the two is the result of the greater heat used in making litharge, which produces fusion of the oxide.

lithe (līth), a.; obs. LITH'ER (lĭth'ẽr); LITH'EST. [AS. līðe tender, mild, gentle; akin to G. lind, gelind, OHG. lindi, Icel. linr, L. lentus flexible, and AS. lunnan to yield.] 1. Mild; calm; gentle; serene; hence, comfortable; agreeable. Obs. or Dial.
2. Capable of being easily bent; pliant; flexible; limber; as, the elephant's lithe proboscis; a lithe dancer.
Syn. — See FLEXIBLE.

li-theo'ta-sy (lĭ-thē'tȧ-sĭ), n. [litho- + Gr. ἔκτασις extension.] Surg. Extraction of a calculus through the dilated neck of the bladder and urethra.

lithe'some (līth'sŭm), a. [See LITHE, a.; cf. LISSOM.] Pliant; limber; flexible; supple; nimble; lissom.

li'thi (lē'tē), n. [Araucanian liti, litre.] A poisonous Chilean anacardiaceous shrub (Lithræa caustica), the hard wood of which is used in cabinetwork.

lith'i-a (lĭth'ĭ-ȧ), n. [Gr. λίθος stone.] 1. Med. Lithiasis.
2. Chem. The oxide of lithium, Li_2O, a white crystalline substance obtained by burning lithium in oxygen, by heating lithium nitrate, etc. Salts of lithium were formerly regarded as binary compounds of lithia with an acid oxide; hence the phrases carbonate of lithia, lithia water, etc.

li-thi'a-sis (lĭ-thī'ȧ-sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λιθίασις, fr. λίθος stone.] Med. The formation of stony concretions, or calculi, in any part of the body, esp. in the bladder and urinary passages or in the Meibomian glands.

lithia water. A mineral water characterized by the presence of lithium salts, esp. the carbonate and bicarbonate.

lith'ic, a. [Gr. λιθικός of or belonging to stones, fr. λίθος stone.] 1. Of or pert. to stone; as, lithic architecture.
2. Med. Pertaining to, or characterized by, the formation of uric-acid concretions (stone) in the bladder or other parts of the body; as, lithic diathesis.
lithic acid, Med. Chem., uric acid.

lith'i-fy (-ĭ-fī), v. t.; LITH'I-FIED (-fīd); LITH'I-FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [litho- + -fy.] Geol. To consolidate (sediments, etc.) into stone. — lith'i-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n.

lith'i-oph'i-lite (-ŏf'ĭ-līt), n. [lithium + Gr. φίλος friend.] Min. A pink, yellow, or brown orthorhombic mineral, commonly massive. It is a phosphate of lithium and manganese with a little iron, $Li(Mn,Fe)PO_4$. Cf. TRIPHYLITE.

lith'ite (lĭth'īt), n. [Gr. λίθος stone.] Anat. & Zoöl. A calcareous concretion, esp. one of those in a tentaculocyst or lithocyst.

lith'i-um (lĭth'ĭ-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λίθος stone; — from its having been discovered in a mineral.] Chem. A soft, silver-white metallic element of the alkali group, the lightest metal known (sp. gr., 0.59). Symbol, Li; at. wt., 7.00. It occurs (always in combination) in several minerals, as amblygonite, petalite, spodumene, and lepidolite, and otherwise widely disseminated, though in small quantities, as in many mineral waters and in plant ashes. Metallic lithium is obtained by electrolyzing the fused chloride. It oxidizes readily in air. Melting point, 186° C. (367° F.). Chemically, lithium resembles sodium. Its salts color flame red. Certain of its salts are used in medicine as a solvent for uric acid.

lith'o-chro'my (-krō'mĭ), n. [litho- + Gr. χρῶμα color + 1st -y.] 1. The art of painting on stone.
2. = CHROMOLITHOGRAPHY.

lith'o-cyst (-sĭst), n. [litho- + -cyst.] Zoöl. 1. A sac containing small calcareous concretions (lithites), found in many medusæ and other invertebrates and supposed to be an auditory organ.
2. Bot. A cell which includes a cystolith. Rare.

Li-thod'o-mus (lĭ-thŏd'ŏ-mŭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λιθοδόμος a mason; λίθος stone + δέμειν to build.] Zoöl. A genus of elongated bivalve shells, allied to the true mussels (genus Mytilus), and remarkable for their ability to bore holes for shelter in solid limestone, shells, etc.

a Shell of Lithodomus plumula, from Panama; 1 1 Cavities bored by a similar species in Limestone (b).

lith'o-fel'lic (lĭth'ŏ-fĕl'ĭk), lith'o-fel-lin'ic (lĭth'ŏ-fĕ-lĭn'-ĭk), a. [litho- + L. fel, fellis, gall.] Physiol. Chem. Pertaining to or designating a crystalline organic acid resembling cholic acid and forming one of the principal constituents of bezoars.

lith'o-frac'teur' (-frăk'tûr'), n. [F., fr. Gr. λίθος stone + L. frangere, fractum, to break.] A blasting explosive of the dynamite class, consisting of nitroglycerin absorbed in a mixture of kieselguhr, barium nitrate, sulphur, etc.

li-thog'e-nous (lĭ-thŏj'ẽ-nŭs), a. [litho- + -genous.] Stone-producing, as polyps which form corals.

lith'o-graph (lĭth'ŏ-grăf), v. t.; LITH'O-GRAPHED (-grăft); LITH'O-GRAPH'ING. [litho- + -graph.] 1. To produce, copy, or portray by lithography; as, to lithograph a painting; a lithographed facsimile.
2. To inscribe, or record by inscribing, on stone. Rare.

lith'o-graph, v. i. To practice lithography.

lith'o-graph, n. A print made by lithography.

li-thog'ra-pher (lĭ-thŏg'rȧ-fẽr), n. 1. A writer about stones. Obs.
2. One who lithographs; one engaged in lithography.

lith'o-graph'ic (lĭth'ŏ-grăf'ĭk) } a. [Cf. F. lithographique.] lith'o-graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } Of or pertaining to lithography; made by lithography; as, the lithographic art, a lithographic picture. — lith'o-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.
lithographic limestone or stone. See LITHOGRAPHY.

li-thog'ra-phy (lĭ-thŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [litho- + -graphy: cf. F. lithographie.] 1. A treatise on stones or rocks. Obs.

‖ lit' de re-pos' (lē dẽ rẽ-pō'). [F., bed of repose.] = CHAISE LONGUE.

lite. † DELIGHT; ELITE, n.; LEER, list; LIGHT, slight.

lits (dial. lĭt), n. Delay; wait. Obs. or Dial. Eng. — v. i. [Cf. Icel. hlíta to rely on.] To wait; delay; expect; trust; rely or count (on). Obs. or Dial. Eng.

litel. † LITTLE.

litelwhat. † LITILLWHAT.

‖ li'tem li'te re-sol've-re. [L.] To settle dispute by dispute; to remove one difficulty by creating another. Adapted from Horace (Satires, II. iii. 103).

‖ li'te pen-den'te. [L.] Pending the suit. [Obs.] lit'er-al, n. 1. Literal meaning.

2. Print. A literal error.

lit'er-a'ri-an (lĭt'ẽr-ā'rĭ-ȧn; 115), n. A person devoted to literary pursuits. Rare.

lith'o-clys'mi-a (-klĭz'mĭ-ȧ), lith'o-clys'my (-mĭ), n. [NL. lithoclysmia; litho- + Gr. κλυσμα a clyster.] = LITHOLYSIS.

lith'o-den'dron, n. [Gr. λιθόδενδρον; λίθος stone + δενδρον tree.] Coral Obs.

Li-thod'es (lĭ-thŏd'ēz), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λιθώδης like stone.] Zoöl. A genus of anomuran crabs having the body globular and spiny and the fifth pair of legs reduced in size and folded in the gill chambers. They live in cold water toward the poles or in the deep sea. It is the type of a family, Li-thodi'dæ (lĭ-thŏd'ĭ-dē).

lith'o-des'ma (lĭth'ŏ-dĕs'mȧ), n. [NL.; litho- + Gr. δέσμα bond.] Zoöl. A small shelly plate connected with the resilium in many bivalve shells.

lith'o-gen'e-sis (lĭth'ŏ-jĕn'ĕ-sĭs), lith'o-gen'e-sy (-sĭ) n. [litho- + Gr. γένεσις origin, generation; cf. F. lithogénésie. See GENESIS.] a The science of the formation of rocks. = PETROGENESIS. b Med. The formation of calculi. — lith'o-ge-net'ic (-jē-nĕt'ĭk), a.

lith'o-glyph (lĭth'ŏ-glĭf), n. [Gr. λιθογλυφίς; λίθος stone + γλύφειν to engrave.] An engraving on stone, esp. on a gem; an engraved stone. — li-thog'ly-pher (lĭ-thŏg'lĭ-fẽr), n. — lith'o-glyph'ic (-glĭf'ĭk), a. & n.

lith'o-glyp'tic (-glĭp'tĭk), a. Lithoglyphic.

lith'o-glyp'tics (-glĭp'tĭks), n. Gem engraving.

lith'o-gra-vure' (lĭth'ŏ-grȧ-vūr'; -grȧ'vûr), n. [litho- + gravure.] A process of photo-engraving on stone.

2. The art or process of putting writing or designs on stone with a greasy material, and of producing printed impressions therefrom ; also, any process based on the same principle, using zinc, aluminium, or some other substance instead of stone. Lithography was invented by Senefelder about 1796. The process depends, in the main, upon the antipathy between grease and water, which prevents a printing ink containing oil from adhering to wetted parts of the stone not covered by the design. The stone used is a compact, fine-grained limestone of yellowish or grayish color, the best variety of which is found at Solenhofen, Bavaria, in the Jurassic system. The greasy material for making the design is called lithographic ink or lithographic crayon or chalk, according to its consistency ; it contains tallow, wax, soap, etc., with coloring matter. The design may be drawn directly on the stone, or may be transferred to the stone from paper. The completed design is "etched" by treatment with dilute acid and gum water, which renders the fatty matter more nearly insoluble and enables the blank portions to retain moisture. The stone is then, after washing, ready for the printing process. Owing to the cost of good lithographic stone, the use of substitutes is increasing. See CHROMOLITHOGRAPHY, PHOTOLITHOGRAPHY, ALUMINOGRAPHY, ZINCOGRAPHY.

lith'oid (lĭth'oid) } a. [litho- + -oid : cf. Gr. λιθοειδής.] Like a stone; having a stony structure.
li-thol'dal (lĭ-thoi'dăl) } li-thol'o-gy (lĭ-thŏl'ŏ-jĭ), n. [litho- + -logy: cf. F. lithologie.] 1. The science of rocks. See PETROLOGY. Obsolete. 2. Med. A treatise on calculi.

— lith'o-log'ic (lĭth'ŏ-lŏj'ĭk), -i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. — lith'o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. — li-thol'o-gist (lĭ-thŏl'ŏ-jĭst), n.

li-thol'y-sis (lĭ-thŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [NL.; litho- + -lysis.] Med. Solution of a calculus in the bladder by the use of injections or drugs. — lith'o-lyt'ic (lĭth'ŏ-lĭt'ĭk), a.

Gr. λειτουργία a public service, the public service of God, public worship; (assumed) λειτος, λειτος, belonging to the people, public (fr. λαός, λεώς, the people) + the root of ἔργον work. See LAY, a.; WORK.] 1. The celebration of the Eucharist; the Holy Communion or Mass; — so called (usually with the epithet the divine) in the Eastern Church; a form of service for this; a Mass; a communion office; — applied specif. to any of the different forms of service now or formerly in use. The use of a liturgy goes back to very early times, as the Didache (about 130) and the description of the Christian worship given by Justin Martyr (about 150) testify. There are five main groups of liturgies, known (either by the names of apostles with whom they are traditionally connected or by the names of the countries or cities in which they are known or believed to have been once or always in use) as: I. St. James, West Syrian, Jerusalem, including the Greek Liturgy of St. James, the oldest; the Syriac Liturgy of St. James and a number of later Syriac liturgies based on it; the Armenian Liturgy of St. Gregory the Illuminator; the Liturgy of St. Basil, used in the Eastern Church on the first five Sundays in Lent, Thursday and Saturday in Holy Week, the vigils of Christmas and Epiphany and St. Basil's Day; the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom, used in the Eastern Church except when the Liturgy of St. Basil or the Liturgy of the Presanctified (see below) is used; the Clementine, or Pseudo-Clementine, Liturgy, found in the 8th Book of the Apostolic Constitutions, — so called because attributed (erroneously) to St. Clement, — which, apparently, was never in use. II. St. Mark, Egyptian, Alexandria, including the Greek liturgies of St. Mark, St. Basil, and St. Gregory; the Coptic liturgies of St. Cyril, St. Basil, and St. Gregory; the Ethiopic liturgy known as the "Canon Universalis," or "Liturgy of all the Apostles;" and many other subordinate Ethiopic liturgies. III. St. Adæus, East Syrian, Edessa, including three extant liturgies, that of SS. Adæus and Maris, that of Theodore of Mopsuestia, and that of Nestorius, now used only by Nestorian Christians; three lost liturgies, that of Narses, that of Barsumas, and that of Diodorus of Tarsus; the liturgy of the Christians of St. Thomas, almost completely assimilated to the Roman liturgy by the Portuguese Jesuits in 1599. IV. St. John, Hispano-Gallican, Ephesus, including a number of Latin liturgies once used throughout Spain, France, northern Italy, and Great Britain and Ireland, but later almost universally superseded by, or assimilated to, the liturgy of the Church of Rome. Ephesine, Ephesian, Ephesus, and St. John have been applied to this group because of certain Eastern characteristics, on the hypothesis that they originated in Ephesus, the residence of St. John. The chief members of this group are: (1) The Mozarabic Liturgy, which was the national liturgy of Spain until the close of the 11th century, when the Roman liturgy superseded it, and which was revived by Cardinal Ximenes in the 16th century and survives, but with certain Roman modifications, in a few churches in Spain. Its origin is unknown. (2) The Gallican Liturgy, which was the national liturgy of France until the beginning of the 9th century, when, under Charlemagne, it was superseded by the Roman liturgy. (3) The Ambrosian, or Milanese, Liturgy, now largely assimilated to the Roman liturgy. (4) The Celtic Liturgy, that used by the churches of the British Isles before the Anglo-Saxon conquest. V. St. Peter, Italian, Rome. There is now only one liturgy in this group, that of the Church of Rome, which, although originally local, has come to be almost coextensive with that church. Its date, origin, and early history are obscure. Earlier representatives are contained in the so-called Leonine, Gelasian, and Gregorian Sacramentaries (see SACRAMENTARY, n., 1). This liturgy was introduced into England in the 7th, into France in the 9th, and into Spain in the 11th, century. In England during the Norman period various local dioceasan uses grew up, the most noted of which is the Sarum Use, compiled by Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, 1078-99, from which much of the Communion service of the American Prayer Book is taken. There are various vernacular liturgies, compiled after the Reformation, which are or were in use in the Reformed churches, such as Luther's German Mass (1526), the Communion service set forth by Zwingli in 1525, and the liturgy of the churches of the Anglican Communion.

2. Hence, a form of public worship; a ritual.

3. Gr. Antiq. Any of various public services or offices imposed in rotation at Athens upon its wealthy citizens; as, ordinary liturgies, such as the equipment of choruses for the public festivals, were often voluntarily borne.

Syn. — Spirited, brisk, vigorous, energetic, buoyant, airy, blithe, light-hearted, sportive, frolicsome. — LIVELY, ANIMATED, VIVACIOUS, SPRIGHTLY, GAY apply to that which is full of life. LIVELY (as here compared) suggests esp. briskness, alertness, or energy; ANIMATED applies esp. to that which is also spirited or bright; as, a lively (cf. animated) discussion; "from grave to gay, from lively to severe" (Pope); "Nothing is cold or languid; the whole is airy, animated, and vigorous" (Johnson). VIVACIOUS and (esp.) SPRIGHTLY suggest greater lightness of spirits or quickness of wit; as, "Richardson looks like a plump white mouse in a wig, at once vivacious and timid" (Leslie Stephen); "She had a constant flow of good spirits, and the charming talent of making every trifle a source of amusement; . . . she was sprightly without being frivolous" (Miss Edgeworth). GAY implies exuberant or overflowing spirits; as, "Strike up the fiddles, let us all be gay!" (Cowper); "gay, harum-scarum young men" (Barham). See SPIRITED, JOCULAR, CHEERFULNESS, ELASTIC.

liv'er, n. [AS. lifer; akin to D. lever, G. leber, OHG. lebara, Icel. lifr, Sw. lefver, Dan. lever; cf. Armenian leard.]

1. In vertebrates, a large, very vascular, glandular organ which secretes bile and causes important changes in many of the substances contained in the blood which passes through it, esp. by converting sugars into glycogen (which it stores up until required), and in forming urea from ammonia and amine compounds. In man it is the largest gland in the body, weighing from forty to sixty ounces. It is of a dark red color, and occupies the upper right portion of the abdominal cavity immediately below the diaphragm, to the curvature of which its upper surface conforms, and is divided by fissures into five lobes. It receives blood both from the hepatic artery and the portal vein (which see). The blood is carried away by the hepatic veins. In the higher vertebrates the liver consists of small lobules, or masses of secreting cells and capillaries surrounding the branches of the hepatic vein; the afferent blood vessels and also the branches of the bile duct run in the interlobular tissue. In the lower vertebrates the structure approaches more nearly to that of an ordinary compound gland. In many invertebrates the term liver or hepatic gland is applied to large compound glands discharging into the alimentary canal. (Cf. PYLORIC CÆCA.) Their secretion is probably usually a digestive fluid; in many cases it contains substances analogous to those of the bile of vertebrates.

2. The liver regarded as the seat of passion or desire, esp. amorous desire. A white liver is traditionally the characteristic of a coward.

3. A liver-colored substance. Obsoles.

American Lobster (Homarus americanus)

American lobster (H. americanus), and the European lobster (H. vulgaris) of the Atlantic coasts. The Norway lobster (Nephrops norvegicus) is similar in form. They have a pair of stalked compound eyes, two pairs of antennæ, and five pairs of legs, of which the first two are modified into enormous chelæ, or pincers, one being usually heavier than the other, with blunt teeth for crushing shells, etc. There are also abdominal swimming legs, but their chief swimming organ is the tail, by means of which they can make sudden backward movements. Lobsters feed on animals, both living and dead, and are usually caught in traps (called lobster pots) baited with animal refuse. Owing to its excellence as food, the American species is becoming scarce. The spiny lobsters, or sea crayfishes, of Palinurus and allied genera lack the large chelæ. The common European species is P. vulgaris. Palinurus argus is a large species, common and used as food at Bermuda.

Lock'i-an (lŏk'ĭ-ăn), a. Pertaining to John Locke or to Lockianism. — Lock'i-an, n.

Lock'i-an-ism (-ĭz'm), n. Philos. The philosophical system of John Locke (1632-1704), set forth in his "Essay Concerning Human Understanding." Locke, denying the existence of innate ideas, and incorrectly representing the Cartesian view of such ideas, asserts that the mind originally resembles a blank tablet. All our knowledge comes from experience, that is, from sense perception, and from reflection, or immediate apprehension of psychical phenomena. Most of our sensations have no actual counterpart in the physical world; the primary or real qualities of things are bulk, figure, number, situation, and motion or rest. Perceptions of other qualities, the secondary qualities such as color, sound, odor, etc., are caused by physical bodies, but do not resemble them. The soul has immediate knowledge of its own being, but the existence of God is an inference of the reason.

lock'ing (lŏk'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of LOCK. — locking bar, Railroads, in an interlocking frame for signals, any of a system of parallel bars each of which is driven longitudinally by a shaft (called a locking shaft) when a corresponding lever is pulled, so as to lock such levers of the conflicting routes as are not already locked by some other lever. — l. bed. = LOCKING BOARD. — l. board, Railroads, the system of locking bars and cross locks in an interlocking frame for signals. W. M. Camp. — l. hoop, Gun Construction, in built-up guns, one of the key rings or half hoops laid with scores cut to receive them, being partly in the tube or over layers of hoops and partly in the next superposed layer. These prevent the longitudinal working of the hoops on the tube or inner layer. — l. plate. a Horol. A count-wheel. b Vehicles. A rub plate. c Mech A plate fitting over or against a nut to lock it. — l. ring, Ordnance, a screw collar connecting the tube and jacket of a Hotchkiss gun and of some other types of guns of minor caliber. — l. shaft. See LOCKING BAR. — l. wheel. a A count-wheel. b A rub plate.

hence, any motor running on tracks for hauling; as, an electric locomotive. Locomotives may be classified: (1) According to the kind of service, as passenger, freight or goods, logging, switching, shunting, etc. (2) According to the total number of wheels, as eight-wheeled, etc. (3) According to the number and arrangement of the driving wheels (connected together by axles in pairs), as single-driver (with one pair), four-coupled (with two pairs), six-coupled, etc. (4) According to the number of cylinders, as three-cylinder, etc. (5) According to the manner of propulsion, as electric, gasoline, liquid air, steam, etc. (6) According to the position of the cylinders, locomotives carrying them entirely inside the framing being designated as inside-cylinder, those which have their two outermost cylinders (often the only two) with connecting rods cranked directly to a pair of driving wheels being known as outside-cylinder locomotives. Locomotives whose wheels are all coupled to act as driving wheels are known as total-adhesion locomotives. Compound locomotives have their cylinders compounded as in the compound engine. Flexibility with great size and strength is attained in the Mallet, or articulated, locomotive by having two separate engines on separate trucks, each operating its own set of drivers. The rack locomotive is used on rack railroads, while the tank locomotive carries its fuel and water on its own frame, the others being dependent upon tenders. Many special types of locomotives are called after the names of the designers, as the Forney type, a four-coupled locomotive containing a small tank and fuel box on the same frame, supported over a two- or four-wheeled trailing truck. It is largely used on elevated roads and suburban lines. Special types of locomotives classified according to wheel arrangement are shown in the table, the larger circles [○] denoting driving wheels, the smaller ones [○] trailers (to the right) and pilot-truck wheels (to the left), the wheel to which the driving rod is usually attached being indicated by a dot [⊙]. The arrangement of pilot-truck wheels, driving wheels, and trailing truck wheels respectively is usually stated by numbers, taken in order, in a formula. Thus 4-6-2 designates the Pacific type, which has 4 pilot-truck wheels, 6 driving wheels, and 2 trailing truck wheels.

Lod'di-ge'si-a (lŏd'ĭ-jē'sĭ-ă), n. [NL.] Zoöl. A remarkable genus of humming birds containing one species, L. mirabilis, of Peru, in which the two outer tail feathers are very long and de-within definite boundaries, separating it from the rocks. According to some decisions, these boundaries may be determined either by the occurrence of walls of country rock, or by the impoverishment of the mass beyond the limit of profitable extraction. In this sense, a legal lode might be a sedimentary bed later in origin than the stratum below it and older than the one above it, since the United States law, apart from its specific exceptions as to coal, saline springs, etc., recognizes only two classes of valuable mineral deposits in the public domain, namely, lodes and placers — including in the former class all deposits of rock in place carrying valuable minerals, and in the latter (according to the practice of the United States Land Office) all other valuable mineral deposits, such as auriferous alluvium or cement, diamonds, and even petroleum, marble, kaolin, borax, phosphates, etc.

☞ Lode, ledge, vein, lead (lēd), and reef are practically synonymous, the first three being so used in the United States Rev. Statutes. Ledge and reef (the Australian term) refer to the projection of the outcrop of a vein above the surface; lead denotes a channel of auriferous gravel; and vein has been limited by some writers to a subordinate fissure within a lode.

lode formation. Mining. A composite vein consisting of a fissure filled with rock which is intersected by numerous bunches and threads of auriferous quartz. Australia.

3. a The workshop of a body of freemasons. Obs. or Hist. b In Masonic and other secret societies, the hall or meeting place of a local branch; hence, the body of members composing such a branch.

4. A cabin, hut, or tent of the North American Indians; a wigwam, tepee, earth lodge, or the like; hence, a family of Indians, or the persons who usually occupy an Indian lodge, — as a unit of enumeration, reckoned from four to six persons; as, a tribe of two hundred lodges, that is, of about a thousand individuals.

5. The den or lair of a wild animal or gregarious group of animals; especially, one involving constructive work; a "house;" as, a beaver's lodge.

6. A collection of objects lodged together. Obs.
The Maldives, a famous lodge of islands De Foe.

7 Mining. The space at the mouth of a level next the shaft, widened to permit wagons to pass, or ore to be deposited for hoisting; — called also platt.

8. a = LOGGIA. Obs. b Theater. = LOGE. Rare.

9. A storage place, esp. for wine. Rare.

10. A reservoir for water. Local, Eng.

lodge, v. t.; LODGED (lŏjd); LODG'ING (lŏj'ĭng). [ME. loggen, OF. logier, F. loger. See LODGE, n.] 1. Of an army, troops, etc.: To encamp. Obs.

2. To provide quarters for; to give a sleeping place or a place of abode to, esp. temporarily; as, to lodge a friend in one's house; also, to serve as a lodging or shelter for.
Every house was proud to lodge a knight Dryden

3. Hence, to receive as a guest or denizen; to accommodate; harbor; shelter; entertain; specif., to take as a lodger, or paying guest.
Memory can lodge a . . . store of images Cheyne

4. To establish or settle (one's self) in a place; as, the troops lodged themselves in the enemy's outworks.

5. To bring to an intended or to a fixed position, as by casting, discharging, thrusting, or the like; as, to lodge a sword or bullet in one.
He lodged an arrow in a tender breast Addison.

6. To place or deposit for safeguard or preservation; as, to lodge money or records in a place of deposit.

7. To place or vest as in a source, means, or agent; — usually with in or with; as, to lodge administrative powers in a person or with a board.

8. To lay or deposit (a complaint, information, or the like) before a proper authority; as, to lodge information against a swindler.

9. Hunting. To drive or track (a deer) to covert.
The deer is lodged; I have tracked her to her covert Addison.

10. To throw or beat down, as growing grain.
Though bladed corn be lodged, and trees blown down Shak.

lodge, v. i. 1. To encamp. Obs.

2. To occupy or dwell in a place temporarily; to have lodging or sleeping quarters; as, to lodge at a hotel; to lodge out of doors. "Lodge by me this night." Shak.

3. To have one's (or its) abode; to dwell; reside; specif., to reside as a paying guest, or lodger.
Something holy lodges in that breast. Milton

4. To come to a rest; to stop and remain; as, the bullet lodged in the bark of a tree.
5. Hunting. To seek covert, as a deer.
6. Agric. To fall or lie down, as grass or grain when weakened or beaten down by a storm.
Syn.—See RESIDE.

A Stag Lodged.

lodge'pole' pine (lŏj'pōl'). A pine (Pinus murrayana) of the western United States. It is a small or medium-sized tree with rather hard wood.
lodg'er (lŏj'ẽr), n. 1. One that lodges; specif., one who occupies a hired room in another's house. A lodger is distinguished from a lessee by the fact that he does not have the rights attaching to the tenancy of a lessee; he is distinguished from a guest by the fact that the keeper of a lodging does not have an innkeeper's liability for the lodger's goods. See LODGING HOUSE; INN, n., 2
2. One that provides lodging; a host. Obs lodger franchise. Eng. Law. The voting franchise in boroughs and counties conferred by statute (in 1867 and 1884) upon persons occupying (for a certain period) lodgings of an annual rental value unfurnished of £10.
lodg'ing (lŏj'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of LODGE. Specif.; vb. n. 1. Dwelling; abode; habitation; esp., temporary abode; sleeping place; quarters.
2. pl. a Quarters for soldiers; camp. Obs. b A room or rooms in the house of another, as a place of residence. c An official residence; specif., the residence of the head of certain of the Oxford colleges. Brit. Oxf. E. D.
lodging house. A house where lodgings are provided and let. The rights and duties of lodging-house keepers are now generally more or less regulated by statute. See LODGER.
lodging knee. Shipbuilding. A horizontal wooden knee for securing a deck beam to a ship's side.
lodg'ment, lodge'ment (lŏj'mĕnt), n. [Cf. F. logement. See LODGE, v.] 1. A lodging place; lodgings; a lodging house, also, the accommodations provided in a lodging house or place. Now Rare.
2. Act, fact, or manner of lodging; esp., a placing, depositing, or coming to rest; as, the lodgment of a balloon in a tree; also, the fact or state of being lodged.
3. Mil. a The occupation and holding of a position in hostile or disputed territory; as, to effect a lodgment. b An intrenchment or other defensive work thrown up to make good a lodgment. Obs. c Quarters for soldiers, whether in citizens' houses or barracks. Obs.
4. An accumulation or collection of something deposited in a place or remaining at rest.
lod'i-cule (lŏd'ĭ-kūl), n. [L. lodicula, dim. of lodix, lodicis, a coverlet: cf. F. lodicule.] Bot. In the flowers of grasses, one of the delicate membranous scales borne on the torus outside of the stamens, and supposed to represent a perianth.
Lod'o-ic'e-a (lŏd'ō-ĭs'ē-ȧ), n. [NL., prob. for Laodicea, fr. Laodice, name of a daughter of Priam, king of Troy.] Bot. A monotypic genus of lofty fan palms. The species (L. callipyge) is the double coconut, or sea coconut.
lo'ess (lō'ĕs; lûs; 277), n. [G. loss.] Geol. A peculiar deposit of loam, ranging to clay at the one extreme and to fine sand at the other, usually of a buff or yellowish brown color, covering extensive areas in North America (esp. in the Mississippi basin), Europe (esp. north central Europe and Russia), and Asia (esp. eastern China), and now generally believed to be an æolian deposit chiefly. There is evidence, however, that some of the material classed as loess is fluvial, or at least aqueous. It is usually calcareous, and often contains shells, chiefly of land (also marsh and pond) snails, and bones and teeth of mammals; also concretions of calcium carbonate, and occasionally of iron oxide. It makes an excellent soil where adequately watered. In many parts of the Mississippi basin the loess has its best development on valley bluffs (to which it is believed to have been blown from the valley flats below), whence it was formerly called the Bluff formation. In Europe and America, at least, it is thought to have originated chiefly after the retreat of the ice sheets, before the land became clothed with vegetation.
lo'ess-oid (lō'ĕs-oid; lûs'oid), n. [loess + -oid.] Geol. Of, pertaining to, or resembling, loess. Rare.
loft (lôft; 205), n. [ME. loft air, height, loft; of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. lopt air, heaven, loft, upper room, Dan. loft loft; akin to AS. lyft air, G. luft, Goth. luftus. Cf. LIFT, v. & n.] 1. a The upper regions; the sky; the air. Archaic. b In various phrases: as, on or upon loft, or the loft, on high; aloft; by loft, in height. Obs.
2. A room or floor above another; an upper room or a story; esp., an attic room or an attic.
Eutychus . . . fell down from the third loft. Acts xx. 9.
3. Hence: a An upper room or attic of a barn; a hayloft. b One of the upper floors of a warehouse or business building, especially when open, without partitions. U. S. c A gallery in a church, hall, etc.; as, the organ loft. d Theaters. = RIGGING LOFT. e = SAIL LOFT.
4. The branches of a tree at any height or level. Obs.
5. A ceiling. Obs.
6. A pigeon house; hence, a flock (of pigeons).
7. Golf. a Pitch or slope of the face of a club (tending to drive the ball upward). b Act of lofting, or a lofting stroke.
loft, v. t.; LOFT'ED; LOFT'ING. 1. To make or furnish with a loft; as, a lofted house.
2. To place or store in a loft; as, to loft pigeons.
3. To cause to have loft; a lofted golf-club head.
4. Golf. To strike (the ball) so that it goes over an obstacle.
loft'-dried', a. Dried by hanging in a loft; dried under cover; as, loft-dried paper.
loft'er (lôf'tẽr), n. Golf. An iron club used in lofting the ball; —called also lofting iron.
lofts'man (lŏfts'mȧn; 205), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). One who lays down the lines of a ship in a shipbuilding loft.
loft'y (lôf'tĭ; 205), a.; LOFT'I-ER (-tĭ-ẽr); LOFT'I-EST. [From LOFT.] 1. Extending or rising high; high, esp., having great or imposing height; towering.
See lofty Lebanon his head advance. Pope.
2. Haughty; proud; arrogant.
Lofty and sour to them that loved him not. Shak.
3. Elevated in character, rank, dignity, spirit, bearing, language, etc.; exalted; noble; stately.
The high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity. Is lvii 15
4. Full-bodied; —said of wool.
Syn.—Tall; exalted, dignified, stately, majestic, sublime; proud, haughty. See HIGH.
lofty pine, the Bhutan pine.
log (lŏg), n. [Perh. orig. imitative of the sound of something bulky and heavy. Oxf. E. D.] 1. A bulky piece or length of unshaped timber; esp., a tree trunk or a length of a trunk or branch trimmed of offshoots and ready for sawing.
2. Hence, fig.: Something inert, inactive, heavy, senseless, or stupid. Cf. KING LOG.
3. A heavy piece of wood used as a clog; hence, a former military punishment by means of a clog.
4. Mining. A weight or block near the free end of a hoisting rope to prevent it from being drawn through the sheave.
5. pl. A lockup, esp. one of rude construction; —so called prob. from the jail of logs used at Sydney, New South Wales, when it was a penal settlement. Australia.
6. [Prob. the same word as in sense 1; cf. LG. log, lock, Dan. log, Sw. logg.] Naut. An apparatus for measuring the rate of a ship's motion through the water. The common log, or chip, consists of the log chip, or log ship (often exclusively called the log, fig. 1 in the Illust.), and the log line, the former being commonly a thin wooden quadrant of five or six inches' radius, loaded with lead on the arc to make it float point up. It is attached to the log line by cords from each corner. This line, from a point about 15 fathoms from the log chip, is divided into equal spaces, called knots, each bearing the same proportion to a mile that the time during which the run-out of the line is measured bears to an hour. This period, generally measured by the log glass, is 28 seconds in American and British naval practice, elsewhere usually 30 seconds, these time intervals corresponding to knots of 47 ft. 3 in. and 50 ft. 8 in. respectively. The line runs freely from the log reel (fig. 2), so that when the log is thrown the water holds it from being drawn forward, and the speed of the vessel is shown by the number of knots run out. Improved logs, called patent or taffrail logs, consist of a mechanism which, being towed astern, or from a boom projecting at the ship's side, shows the distance traveled (through the water) by the ship by registering the revolutions of a fly (fig. 4) either, in a taffrail log (fig. 3), on a dial plate at the inboard end of the line, or on the log itself in a harpoon log. Where the water is shallow, and tidal currents strong, the log chip is often replaced by a lead, or sinker, the apparatus then being known as a ground log.

Logs, 6.

7. Hence: The record of the rate of a ship's speed or of her daily progress; also, the full nautical record of a ship's cruise or voyage; a log slate; a log book.
8. Mech. The record of an engine, boiler, or other trial, in which a series of observations have been taken.
9. Tailoring. A scale for computing time credit on different kinds of work. Brit. Oxf. E. D.
log (lŏg), v. t.; LOGGED (lŏgd); LOG'GING (lŏg'ĭng). 1. To fell and lop (a tree); to cut (timber) into logs; to fell the timber on (a tract of land).
2. Naut. To enter in a log book; as, to log the miles run.
log, v. i. 1. To engage in the business of cutting or transporting logs for timber; to get out logs.
2. To lie or be like a log; to be inert or sluggish. Rare.
to log up, to make a log support for a windlass. Australia.
lo'gan ap'ple (lō'gȧn). The small acid fruit of an Australian rutaceous tree (Acronychia acidula); also, the tree.
lo'gan-ber'ry (-bĕr'ĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-ĭz). [After Judge J. H. Logan of California, who produced it in 1881.] A hybrid between the raspberry and blackberry.
Lo-ga'ni-a (lō-gā'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after James Logan, an Irish botanist, secretary to William Penn.] Bot. A genus of herbs and undershrubs, typifying the family Loganiacæ, natives of Australia and New Zealand. They have small pentamerous flowers in axillary or terminal cymes.
Lo-ga'ni-a'ce-æ (-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of herbs, shrubs, and trees (order Gentianales), distinguished from the Gentianaceæ by the presence of stipules. It includes about 32 genera and over 350 species, most of them possessing poisonous properties. See GELSEMIUM, BUDDLEIA, STRYCHNOS. —lo-ga'ni-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.
log'a-œ'dic (lŏg'ȧ-ē'dĭk), a. [Gr. λογαοιδικός, lit., prose-poetic; —so called because the mixed rhythm resembles that of prose; λόγος discourse, prose + ἀοιδή song.] Gr. & Lat. Pros. Composed of dactyls and trochees, or of anapæsts and iambi, combined in the same cola, or metrical series.—n. A logaœdic verse. The dactyls and anapæsts of logaœdic verse are cyclic (which see). Other frequent characteristics are the irrational foot, and the protraction of a long syllable to fill an entire foot. The term logaœdic is sometimes applied to mixed meters generally.
log'a-rithm (lŏg'ȧ-rĭth'm; -rĭth'ĭm; 277), n. [Gr. λόγος word, account, proportion + ἀριθμός number: cf. F. logarithme.] Math. The exponent of that power of a fixed number (called the base) which equals a given number (called the antilogarithm); thus if $B^l = N$, then l is the logarithm of N (to the base B). If $B = 10$, the logarithms are called common, or Briggsian, from their proposer, Henry Briggs (1561-1630). These are universally used in computation. If $B = e$ (the fundamental transcendent) the logarithms are natural, universally used in theoretic investigations. This so-called natural base e is defined thus: $e = \text{Limit}\left(1+\frac{1}{n}\right)^n$ for n infinite, or $e = 1 + \frac{1}{1} + \frac{1}{1\cdot 2} + \frac{1}{1\cdot 2\cdot 3} + \ldots = 2.71828\ldots$; it is the amount of a unit for the unit time at the unit rate (100%) when the interest falls due and is compounded continually. Napierian logarithms are those calculated by John Napier, Baron of Merchiston, Scotland (1550-1617), who invented them and expounded them (1614) in his "Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Descriptio" (in British science next to Newton's "Principia"), which are often confounded with natural logarithms, with which they are connected by the relation $\text{Nap. log } n = 10^7\left\{\text{nat. log. }\left(\frac{10^7}{n}\right)\right\}$. Proportional logarithms are the remainders left on subtracting the logarithms of numbers (of seconds) from the logarithm of 3,600 (the number of seconds in an hour).—Tables of natural logarithms were published by John Speidell (London, 1619); of common logarithms by Briggs (1624, 1633) and Vlacq (1628, 1633); Napier's logarithms (1614) were only of sines for every minute of the quadrant and to seven or eight places. Corresponding antilogarithms and logarithms form corresponding geometric and arithmetic progressions; thus, in common logarithms, $$N = 1, 10^1, 10^2, 10^3, 10^4, \ldots$$
hence, instead of forming the product or quotient of two numbers we may form the sum or difference of their logarithms, on which fact depends the practical utility of the invention. The arithmetical complement of a logarithm is the remainder when the logarithm is subtracted from 10. See also LOGARITHMIC SINES, etc.
log'a-rith'mic (-rĭth'mĭk, -rĭth'mĭk) } a. Math. Of log'a-rith'mi-cal (-rĭth'mĭ-kăl; -rĭth'mĭ-) } or affecting the logarithm; as, a logarithmic decrement, derivation, etc. logarithmic curve, Math., a curve in which one rectangular coordinate of any point is the logarithm of the other; its equation is $y = \log x$; —called also logistic curve or line. —1. decrement, the natural logarithm of the ratio of one oscillation to the next when a vibrating body is damped by fluid or similar friction, or $\log \frac{I}{I_2} = \frac{at}{2}$, where a is a constant and t the periodic time.—1. ellipse, Math., the intersection of a paraboloid and an elliptic cylinder.—1. series, one whose terms depend on logarithms; also, the expansion $\log(1+x) = x - \frac{x^2}{2} + \frac{x^3}{3} - \frac{x^4}{4} + \ldots$—1. sines, cosines, tangents, etc., the logarithms of sines, cosines, tangents, etc. With 10 added, to make them positive in sign, they appear as tabular logarithms in logarithmic tables.—1. singularity, Math., a point in the neighborhood of which a function behaves like a logarithm.—1. spiral. = EQUIANGULAR SPIRAL.
log'a-rith'mi-cal-ly (-mĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv. By the use of logarithms; as a logarithm.
log board. Naut. A board consisting of two parts shutting together like a book, with columns in which are entered the direction of the wind, course of the ship, etc., during each hour, these entries being later transferred to the log book. It has been superseded by a folding log slate, and in the United States navy by a deck log.
log book, or log'book', n. Naut. A book in which is entered the daily progress of a ship at sea, as indicated by the log, with notes on the weather and incidents of the voyage; a sea journal; —usually called simply log.
log cabin, log house. A cabin or house made of logs.
Log Cabin and Hard Cider Campaign. U. S. Hist. See HARD CIDER CAMPAIGN.
log'cock' (lŏg'kŏk'), n. a The pileated woodpecker. b The ivory-billed woodpecker.
loge (lōzh), n. [F. See LODGE.] A booth or stall; specif., a box or stall, as in a theater or opera house.
log frame. Mach. A sawing machine; specif., one having a gang of saws for slitting a log into boards, or deals.
log'gat (lŏg'ȧt), log'get, n. [Cf. LOG, n.] Obs. or Hist. 1. A small log; a stake.
2. pl. An old English game played by throwing pieces of wood at a stake in the ground. Shak.
logged (lŏgd), p. a. 1. Made slow and heavy in movement; water-logged.
2. Cleared, as land, by cutting logs.
log'ger-head' (lŏg'ẽr-hĕd'), n. [Dial. logger a log or block of wood (cf. LOG, n.) + head.] 1. A blockhead; numskull; also, a head that is large, thick, or clumsy.
2. An iron tool consisting of a long handle terminating in a ball or bulb used, when heated, to melt tar, to heat liquids, as flip, etc.
The loggerhead, whose hissing dip, Timed by wise instinct, creamed the bowl of flip. Lowell.
3. Naut. An upright piece of round timber, in a whaleboat, around which a turn of the line is taken when it is running out too fast.

Lodge Federal Election Bill. [After Henry C. Lodge.] See FORCE BILL b. lodge'ment. Var. of LODGMENT. lodging money. Mil. An allowance at one time granted to officers and soldiers in the British army in lieu of quarters.
Lo'dha (lō'dă; 147), n. [Hind. lōdhā agriculturist.] One of a low caste numerous in the Central and United Provinces and in central India.
lodh bark (lōd). [Hind. lōdh.] The bark of an East Indian symplocaceous tree (Symplocos racemosa), used in dyeing; also, the tree itself.
lod'i-cle (lŏd'ĭ-k'l). Var. of LODICULE Rare.
lo-dic'u-la (lō-dĭk'ū-lȧ), n. [L. See LODICULE.] Bot. A lodicule. lod'ly. † LOATHLY.
lod'o-my (lŏd'ō-mĭ). Obs. or dial. Eng. var. of LAUDANUM.
Lo'do-wic (lō'dō-wĭk), n. = LOUIS, masc. prop. name.
Lo'dur, n. = LOKI.
loe. † LOVE.
loe. † LO, LOW.
Lo-ë'gri-a (lō-ē'grĭ-ȧ), or Lo'gres (lō'grēs), n. Also Lo-ë'gra (lō-ē'grȧ). [OF. Loengre, Logres, or LL. Loegria; cf. W. Lloegr.] England; —so called in the old romances and histories, from the legendary king Locrine, or Logris.
loel'ling-ite. Var. of LÖLLINGITE.
loe-mog'ra-phy (lē-mŏg'rȧ-fĭ). Var. of LOIMOGRAPHY.
loe-mol'o-gy (lē-mŏl'ō-jĭ). Var. of LOIMOLOGY. loenge. † LOANGE.
loes. † LOSE. [of IMPROVED LOESS | loe'some (lō'sŭm). Scot. var. | Loess'kind'chen (lûs'kĭnt'-shĕn), n. [G. lösskindchen; löss loess + kindchen, dim. of kind child.] Geol. A small calcareous concretion occurring in loess.
loe'we-ite, loe'wig-ite. Vars. of LÖWEITE, LÖWIGITE. lof, n. [G. lof, in the Baltic provinces] See MEASURE, Table.
lof, n. [AS.] Praise; value. Obs.
lofe. † LOAF, LOF, LOOF, LOVE, LUFF. loffe. † LAUGH.
lof'som. † LOVESOME. loft, a. [Cf ALOFT, LOFTY.] Lofty; proud. Obs.
loft'i-est, a., superl. of LOFTY. loft'i-ly (lôf'tĭ-lĭ), adv. of LOFTY. See -LY.
loft'i-ness, n. See -NESS.
lofting iron. Golf. = LOFTER.
loft'less, a. See -LESS.
loft'ly, adv. Loftily. Obs.
log (lŏg; lôg), n. [Heb lōg.] A Hebrew measure of capacity, about a pint. See MEASURE, Table.
log, v. t. & i. To rock; to oscillate. Dial. Eng.
log, n. A lugworm. Dial Eng.
log. Abbr. Logarithm. log'a-nin (lŏg'ȧ-nĭn), n. [From LOGANIACEÆ, family to which nux vomica belongs.] Org. Chem. A glucoside obtained from nux vomica log'an, or log'gan, stone (lŏg'-ȧn). [For logging, fr. dial. log to rock.] = ROCKING STONE log'a-rism, n. A logarithm. Obs.
log'a-rith'mal (lŏg'ȧ-rĭth'mȧl; -rĭth'mȧl), a. Logarithmic.
log'a-rith-met'ic (-rĭth-mĕt'-ĭk), log'a-rith-met'i-cal (-ĭ-kȧl), a. = LOGARITHMIC. —log'a-rith-met'i-cal-ly, adv.
log'a-rith'mo-man'cy (lŏg'ȧ-rĭth'mō-măn'sĭ), n. [logarithm + -mancy.] Divination by logarithms.
log'a-rith'mo-tech'ny (-tĕk'nĭ), n. [logarithm + Gr τέχνη art.] Art of calculating logarithms.
log canoe. A dugout canoe.
log chip Naut See LOG, n., 6. loge. † LODGE.
loge, n. A watch. Obs. Cant.
log'fish', n. The rudder fish (Palmnrichthys perciformis).
log fixer. = ROSSER a. log'gage. † LUGGAGE.
log'gan stone See LOGAN STONE. logge † LODGE, LOG, LUG, v.
log'ger, a [Cf. LOGGERHEAD.] Heavy; stupid. Obs. or Scot.
log'ger (lŏg'ẽr), n. One engaged in logging.
log'ger, n. A clog; a clod; lumpy meat. Dial. Eng.
log'ger, v. i. To hang or move loosely. Scot. & Dial. Eng.
loggerand, p. a. Prob., sprawling or straddling. Obs. Scot.
log'ger-heads' (lŏg'ẽr-hĕdz'), n.

4. a A very large marine turtle (Caretta caretta) common in the warmer parts of the Atlantic Ocean, from Brazil to Cape Cod. The same or a similar species occurs in the Pacific and Indian oceans. It is carnivorous and less valued for food than the green turtle. b The alligator turtle a.

Loggerhead (Caretta caretta). 1/30

5. a An American shrike (Lanius ludovicianus) See SHRIKE, Illust. b The steamer duck. c In the West Indies, any of certain large flycatchers.

loggerhead sponge. A massive sponge of the West Indies and Florida, of inferior quality and little value; — probably named from the loggerhead turtle, which eats it.

log'gia (lŏj'ă; lŏ'jĭ-ă; It. lôd'jä), n.; pl E. LOGGIAS (lŏj'ăz, lô'jĭ-ăz), It. LOGGE (lôd'jā). [It., of G. origin. See LODGE.] Arch. A roofed open gallery. It differs from a veranda in being more architectural, and in forming more decidedly a part of the main edifice; from a porch, in being intended not for entrance, but for an out-of-door sitting room.

log'ging (lŏg'ĭng), n. 1. The business of felling trees, cutting them into logs, and transporting the logs to sawmills or to market.

2. Logrolling. Obs.

log glass. Naut. A small hourglass used to time the running out of a chip log line. See LOG, n., 6.

log'ic (lŏj'ĭk), n. [ME. logike, F. logique, L. logica, logice, Gr. λογική (sc. τέχνη), fr. λογικός belonging to speaking or reason, fr. λόγος speech, reason, λεγειν to say, speak. See LEGEND; cf. -LOGY.] 1. The science or art of exact reasoning, or of pure and formal thought, or of the laws according to which the processes of pure thinking should be conducted, the science of the formation and application of general notions; the science of generalization, judgment, classification, reasoning, and systematic arrangement. Logicians have never agreed upon the definition of logic. Even in medieval times there was doubt as to whether it is a mode of knowing or an instrument of knowledge, a science or an art. The works of modern logicians are in three main groups: (1) those that follow the traditional or formal logic of Aristotle and the Schoolmen, and also commonly recognize the empirical or inductive logic of Bacon and Mill (see ARISTOTELIAN LOGIC, INDUCTIVE LOGIC); (2) those that endeavor to construct an algebraic, exact, or symbolic logic, on the analogy of mathematics (see SYMBOLIC LOGIC); (3) those that follow Hegel in making logic a criticism of the understanding practically identical with metaphysics.

Logic is the science of the laws of thought, as thought; that is, of the necessary conditions to which thought, considered in itself, is subject. Sir W. Hamilton

Logic, then, is the science of the operations of the understanding which are subservient to the estimation of evidence: both the process itself of advancing from known truths to unknown, and all other intellectual operations in so far as auxiliary to this. J. S. Mill.

In Hegelianism, logic is the science of the principles, method, and system of what is universal and necessary in thought. W. T. Harris.

I entertain no doubt that in content logic is one with metaphysics, and differs if at all simply in mode of treatment — in tracing the evolution of knowledge in the light of its value and import, instead of attempting to summarize its value and import apart from the details of its evolution. B. Bosanquet.

We return then to the old view of Aristotle's Analytics that logic analyzes inference as a means to knowledge, and to the old definition of logic, Logica est ars ratiocinandi, ut discernatur verum a falso [Logic is the art of reasoning, to the end that truth may be discerned from falsity]. Encyc. Brit.

2. A treatise on logic; also, the methodology or formal principles of any branch of knowledge; as, the logic of art.

3. Reasoning or argumentation; esp., sound reasoning. Also, something that tends to convince as completely as reasoning; anything that as an antecedent determines what must follow; as, the logic of the situation made surrender inevitable; you reason well, but the logic of facts is against you; artillery has been called the logic of kings.

The grape, that can with logic absolute
The two and seventy jarring sects confute. E. FitzGerald.

log'ic (lŏj'ĭk), a. 1. = LOGICAL.

2. Pertaining to the Logos. Rare.

log'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. [Cf. F. logique, L. logicus, Gr. λογικός.] 1. Of or pertaining to logic; used in logic.

2. According to the rules of logic; as, a logical argument or inference; the reasoning is logical.

3. Skilled in logic; versed in the art of thinking and reasoning; as, he is a logical thinker.

4. In accordance with the inferences reasonably to be drawn from preceding or surrounding events or circumstances; reasonable or to be expected under all the circumstances; as, the logical depression of the stock market after a panic; a logical candidate for an office in view of the issues and his record; the logical result of an act.

logical accent or stress, Phon., accent or stress placed on the most important words of sentences, and upon the most important syllable (usually the root syllable) in words. It is characteristic of German, English, etc., as contrasted with French, etc. — 1. impossibility, a condition or statement involving contradiction or absurdity. — logical interpretation. Law. See DOCTRINAL INTERPRETATION. — 1 necessity See NECESSITY. — 1. piano, Math. Log., a machine devised by Jevons, which, being charged with any number of premises, may be made to give forth all possible correct logical combinations of the same, as conclusions. — 1. product, Math. Log., the class of elements common to two classes, denoted by uniting their symbols consecutively; as, xy is the logical product of the two classes x and y. — 1. reason. See REASON, n., 6. — 1. stress. See LOGICAL ACCENT. — 1. sum, Math. Log., the class formed of all members of two (or more) classes (overlapping or not); as, $z + y$ is the logical sum of the two classes x and y. — 1. unity. See UNITY. — 1. whole. See WHOLE.

-log'i-cal (-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), -log'ic (-ĭk). A suffix of adjectives corresponding to nouns ending in -logy.

log'i-co- (lŏj'ĭ-kō-). A combining form meaning logic or logical; as, logico-metaphysical.

log'i-on (lŏg'ĭ-ŏn), n.; L. pl. LOGIA (-ă). [Gr. λόγιον saying, fr. λόγος word.] A saying or maxim of a religious teacher; specif. [often cap.], a saying of Jesus; — applied esp., chiefly in the pl., to such sayings contained in collections which were early current and are supposed to have been used by Matthew and the other evangelists, and to Agrapha (which see). One such collection formed the basis of an elaborate commentary by Papias (2d century). Also, pl. [cap.], the title given by Grenfell and Hunt to the fragment of a collection of sayings of Jesus found by them at Oxyrhynchus, Egypt, 1897. In 1903 they discovered new sayings (published 1904) at the same place. See APOCRYPHA.

-logist. A compound suffix, from -logy + -ist.

lo-gis'tic (lō-jĭs'tĭk) } a. [Gr. λογιστικός skilled in calcu-lo-gis'ti-cal (-tĭ-kăl) } lating, λογίζεσθαι to calculate, fr. λόγος word, number, reckoning: cf. F. logistique.] 1. Pert. to reasoning; logical; also, pert. to reckoning. Obs. or R.

2. Math. Sexagesimal.

logistic curve, Math., the logarithmic curve. — 1., or proportional, logarithms. See LOGARITHM.

lo-gis'tics (-tĭks), n. 1. The art of elementary numerical calculation, as by the four fundamental operations.

2. Math. Logistic, or sexagesimal, arithmetic.

3. Mil. That branch of the military art which embraces the details of transport and supply.

log'o- (lŏg'ō-). Combining form from Greek λόγος, word, thought, speech, discourse; also, sometimes, ratio.

log'o-gram (-grăm), n. [logo- + -gram.] 1. A word letter; a phonogram that, for the sake of brevity, represents a word; as, |, i. e., I, for it. Cf. GRAMMALOGUE.

2. A logogriph.

log'o-graph (-grăf), n. [logo- + -graph.] 1. A character or sign representing a word; a logogram.

2. Print. A logotype. Rare.

3. A sensitive form of phonautograph invented by W. H. Barlow, about 1874.

lo-gog'ra-pher (lō-gŏg'rȧ-fẽr), n. 1. Gr. Antiq. A chronicler; a prose historian; also, a professional speech writer.

2. One skilled in logography.

log'o-graph'ic (lŏg'ō-grăf'ĭk) } a. [Gr. λογογραφικός of log'o-graph'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl) } writing speeches: cf. F. logographique.] Of or pertaining to logography. — log'o-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.

lo-gog'ra-phy (lō-gŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [Gr. λογογραφία a writing of speeches; λόγος word, speech + γράφειν to write: cf. F. logographie.] 1. Use of logotypes in printing.

2. A mode of reporting speeches in long hand, a number of reporters taking three or four words each in succession.

log'o-griph (lŏg'ō-grĭf), n. [logo- + Gr. γρίφος a fishing net, a dark saying, a riddle: cf. F. logogriphe.] a A sort of riddle in which it is required to discover a chosen word from various combinations of its letters, or of some of its letters, which form other words, or from verses containing synonyms of words that can be made from the one to be guessed; — thus, to discover the chosen word chatter from cat, hat, rat, hate, rate, etc. b An anagram, or any rearrangement of letters. — log'o-griph'ic (-grĭf'ĭk), a.

lo-gom'a-chy (lō-gŏm'ȧ-kĭ), n.; pl. -CHIES (-kĭz). [Gr. λογομαχία; λόγος word + μάχη fight, battle, contest.] 1. Contention in words merely, or a contention about words; a war of words.

The discussion concerning the meaning of the word "justification" . . . has largely been a mere logomachy. L. Abbott.

2. A game of word making.

— log'o-mach (lŏg'ō-măk), lo-gom'a-chist (lō-gŏm'ȧ-kĭst), n. — log'o-mach'ic (lŏg'ō-măk'ĭk), log'o-mach'i-cal (-ĭ-kăl), a. — lo-gom'a-chize (lō-gŏm'ȧ-kīz), v. i.

log'o-man'cy (lŏg'ō-măn'sĭ), n. [logo- + -mancy.] Divination by means of magical words or formulæ.

log'o-ma'ni-a (-mā'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; logo- + mania.] Med. Morbid garrulousness; abnormal talkativeness, esp. of insane persons, often involving coining of words.

lo-gom'e-ter (lō-gŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [Gr. λόγος ratio + -meter.]

1. Math. A logarithmic scale.

2. Chem. A logometric scale. See LOGOMETRIC.

log'o-met'ric (lŏg'ō-măt'rĭk) } a. [Gr. λόγος word, ratio

log'o-neu-ro'sis (lŏg'ō-nū-rō'sĭs), n. [NL.; logo- + neurosis.] Med. A disorder of thought accompanied by loss of word memory and impairment of speech.

log'o-ple'gi-a (-plē'jĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; logo- + -plegia.] Med. Inability to pronounce certain words, as a result of paralysis; — a form of aphasia. — log'o-ple'gic (-plē'jĭk), a.

long (lŏng; 205), a.; LON'GER (lŏn'gẽr); LON'GEST (lŏn'gĕst). [AS. long, langˌ; akin to OS., OFries., D., & G. lang, Icel. langr, Sw. lång, Dan. lang, Goth. laggs, L. longus. Cf. LENGTH, LING a fish, LINGER, LUNGE, PURLOIN.]

1. Of great or considerable extent from end to end, specif.: a Of distance, a line, or anything thought of in linear dimension: Considerably extended; not short; as, a long road, shaft, string; long hair; a long beard. b With reference to shape: Forming the chief linear dimension; as, the long side of anything; hence, considerably greater in this dimension than in any other; as, a long building or boat; a long blade; a bird with a long tail; also, comparatively great in the dimension of its axis; not broad; as, a long skull or head. c Specif.: Of great or unusual extent from base to top; tall; as, a long tree; a long person; — formerly often an epithet prefixed to a proper name; as, Long Tom Coffin. Now Chiefly Jocular.

2. Of great or considerable extent from beginning to end; specif.: a Of time or that which is in time: Having a great or considerable duration; not brief; as, a long era; a long debate; a long illness, a long sentence, that is, a sentence to a long term in prison. b Hence, tiresomely long or seeming so; tedious; as, the long hours. c Of a series or anything measured serially or numerically: Containing many items, counts, or members; as, a long list; to give long odds, a long word or sentence; a long poem.

3. Extended to (a specified) measure, or to (a greater or less) degree, of length, in space or time or in any series; as, a mile long, that is, extended to the measure of a mile; longer by a span; a sermon an hour long; a drama five acts long; the longest word in English.

4. Designating a measure of a greater length or quantity than the standard; as, a long mile; a long dozen; given three minutes to speak, he made it a long three minutes.

5. Extending over a great or considerable reach of space or time; directed to what is distant in space, time, or accessibility; far-reaching; as, long sight (farsightedness); a long view of anything; a long farewell; a long memory; hence, involving more than ordinary liability to error; somewhat random; as, a long guess or inference

6. Occurring or due after an extended interval; distant in time; far away; as, a long date; a long note.

That we may us reserve both fresh and strong Against the tournament, which is not long Spenser.

7. Phon. & Pros. Of a relatively great duration; — said in phonetics esp. of a vowel sound (sometimes a consonant sound) as compared with another called short; in prosody, esp. of a syllable. Properly the short sound corresponding to a given letter is the same, or practically the same, as the long sound, but of less duration. In current English usage, however, a "long" vowel sound, as of ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, is that used as its alphabetic name, the corresponding "short" sound being that which it most commonly has in a short (closed) accented syllable, the pairs of vowel sounds thus contrasted no longer corresponding phonetically. See Guide to Pron., §§ 72-77. In Greek and Latin prosody a long syllable is conventionally supposed to occupy two time units (moræ); a short syllable, one. In Latin, long syllables are: (1) those containing a long vowel or a diphthong; (2) those containing a short vowel followed by two consonants (except a mute followed by l or r) or by a double consonant (x, z), such syllables being called long by position, although their vowel is pronounced short. Syllables of Lo-toph'a-gi (lō-tŏf'ā-jī), n. pl. [L., fr. Gr. λωτοφάγοι; λωτος the lotus + φαγεῖν to eat.] In the Odyssey, a people visited by Odysseus, who subsisted on the lotus and lived in the dreamy indolence it was supposed to induce (see LOTUS, 1); hence, in later story, a people of North Africa identified as the Homeric lotus-eaters. — lo-toph'a-gous (-gŭs), a. Rare. — lo-toph'a-gous-ly, adv. Rare.

lot'ter-y (lŏt'ĕr-ĭ), n. ; pl. -TERIES (-ĭz). [Prob. fr. It. lotteria. See LOTTO, LOT, n.] 1. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot or chance ; esp., a scheme by which one or more prizes are distributed by chance among persons who have paid or promised a consideration for a chance to win them, usually as determined by the numbers on tickets as drawn from a lottery wheel. Three principal forms of lottery have been used : lotto, or the Genoese, or number, lottery ; the class, or Dutch, lottery ; and the interest lottery. In the Genoese lottery (originating, about 1530, from a form of political election at Genoa) the player wins by choosing one (amplum), two (ambo), three (terno), four (quaterno), or five (quinto) out of five numbers which draw prizes out of the total of 95 tickets drawn. In class lottery (originating early in the 16th century in Holland) the tickets are drawn in certain classes or series, for each of which certain prizes are fixed, increasing in number and value with each class. An interest lottery is one that issues bonds for borrowed money at less than the normal rate of interest, giving chances as the consideration for the low interest. All lotteries are now unlawful under the laws of Great Britain and those of the Federal governments and most of the State governments in the United States.

2. Fig., an affair of chance.

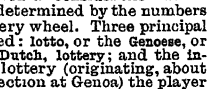
3. Allotment by chance ; thing allotted. Obs. Shak.

4. A game in which prizes are given from a pool to holders of cards matching others reserved for that purpose.

lottery wheel. The wheel bearing the drum in which the lottery tickets are placed to be drawn.

lot'ting, p. pr. & vb. n. of LOT. Specif., vb. n., the assorting of goods, etc., into lots.

lot'to (lŏt'ō), n. [It. lotto, prop., a lot, of G. origin : cf. F. loto, fr. It. See LOT.] 1. A game played with cards bearing numbers, five in each line, the holder covering a number when it is called by one who draws numbered balls from a bag. The game is won by the player who first covers a line of numbers.



A Card such as is used in Lotto.

2. Genoese, or number, lottery. See LOTTERY.

lo'tus (lō'tŭs), n. [L. lotus, Gr. λωτός.] 1. In legendary Greek history, the fruit which served as the food of the Lotophagi, or lotus-eaters ; also, the tree bearing this fruit. It is usually identified with Zizyphus lotus, one of the jujube trees, but has also been referred to Rhamnus lotus, to the nettle tree (Celtis australis), and other species. The fruit, as well as the wine made from it, was supposed to cause a state of dreamy content and complete forgetfulness of home and friends.

2. Short for LOTUS TREE.

3. Any of several flowering water plants represented in ancient Egyptian and Hindu art (see ARCHITECTURE, Illust.) : a The Indian, or sacred, lotus (Nelumbo nelumbo) ; hence, esp. in American horticulture, any plant of the genus Nelumbo. b Either of the Egyptian water lilies Castalia lotus and C. cærulea. See EGYPTIAN LOTUS, NELUMBO.

4. Arch. An ornament much used in ancient decoration, notably in certain types of Egyptian capitals, generally asserted to have been suggested by the Egyptian water lily. See ARCHITECTURE, Illust.

5. [cap.] Bot. A large genus of fabaceous herbs or subshrubs having pinnate leaves and red, pink, or white umbellate flowers. The species are widely distributed in temperate regions, many occurring in the western United States. Some are cultivated for ornament, while others, as the bird's-foot trefoil (L. corniculatus), are used for fodder and forage. The mention of the lotus in the Iliad as affording food for horses, and the citations from the early herbalists, probably refer to species of this genus.

lotus berry. The yellow edible fruit of a West Indian sapotaceous tree (Byrsonima lucida) ; also, this tree.

lo'tus-eat'er, lo'tos-eat'er, n. One of the Lotophagi ; hence, one who gives himself up to indolence and day-dreams. — lo'tus-eat'ing, a. & n.

lo'tus-in (lō'tŭs-ĭn), n. [lotus + -in.] Org. Chem. A crystalline glucoside obtained from Lotus arabicus. On hydrolysis it yields hydrocyanic acid, glucose, and a yellow coloring matter called lotoflavin.

lotus tree. 1. Any of several trees reputed to have furnished the lotus eaten as food by the ancients ; specif. : a The jujube tree Zizyphus lotus of northern Africa (see JUJUBE). b The somewhat similar tree Rhamnus lotus. c The nettle tree of southern Europe (Celtis australis). d A desert shrub (Nitraria tridentata) of the goosefoot family, having tonic succulent berries.

2. The date plum Diospyros lotos or the American persimmon (D. virginiana).

loud (loud), a. ; LOUD'ER (-ẽr) ; LOUD'EST [ME. loud, lud, AS. hlūd ; akin to OS. hlūd, D. luid, OHG. lūt, G. laut, L. -clutus, in inclutus, incluitus, celebrated, renowned, cluere to be called, Gr. κλυτος heard, loud, famous, κλύειν to hear, Skr. çru. Cf. CLIENT, LISTEN.] 1. Of sound : Marked by intensity, or relative intensity ; not low, soft, or subdued ; as, a loud noise or tone ; also, with reference to the stimulus, giving an intense or relatively intense auditory impression ; as, a loud voice or cry ; loud thunder. See HEARING.

They were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. Luke XXIII 23.

2. Giving or making a loud sound or sounds ; having a loud tone ; as, the loud surf ; a loud trumpet ; hence, noisy ; as, the loud machines ; loud streets.

3. Hence, fig. : Striking or impressive as from clamor, turmoil, vehemence, emphasis, or the like ; unrestrained in expression ; outspoken ; "crying ;" as, loud admiration ; a loud offense ; a loud, or obvious, lie. "Loud reason." Shak. "The loud world." Sir H. Taylor.

4. Of other than auditory impressions. Offensive in quality or intensity ; esp., offensively vivid or strong ; as, a loud perfume ; loud colors ; often, offending æsthetic sensibility or the sense of propriety ; ostentatious ; showy ; as, a loud pattern ; loud jewelry ; hence, crass ; unrefined ; as, loud manners. Colloq.

lou'is d'or' (lōō'ĭ dōr'). [F., gold louis.] a A French gold coin varying in value from about $4 to $4.79, first struck in 1640, and superseded by the new system of 1795. The latest ones were worth $4.516 or 18s. 6 7 d. b A current gold coin of France, the 20-franc piece (worth $3.86) ; — so called esp. under the Bourbon Restoration and Louis Philippe.

Louisiana Purchase. The vast territory purchased in 1803 for $15,000,000 by the United States, then under the presidency of Jefferson, from France, then governed by Napoleon as First Consul. It extended westward from the Mississippi River to the Rocky Mountains and northward from the Gulf of Mexico to British America.

lou'i-sine' (lōō'ĭ-zēn'), n. [From Louis or Louise, a proper name. Oxf. E. D.] A thin, soft, twilled silk, usually woven in checks or stripes, and used for dresses.

Lou'is Qua-torze' (lōō'ĭ kă-tôrz'). [F., Louis fourteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XIV. of France or his reign (1643–1715) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the style in architecture, decorative art, furniture, etc., prevailing in his time. The architecture was of a more imposing character than that of the preceding reign, with a completer return to the ancient orders and details, which gave to it a cold and regular aspect, with great richness of interior decoration. In furniture, elaborate carving and gilding, inlay as in buhl work, Roman motives in ornamentation, and a combination of straight and curved lines in design are characteristic features. Decorative art was beginning to be florid, and the style called rococo and rocaille was beginning to take shape.

Lou'is Quinze' (kănz'). [F., Louis fifteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XV. of France or his reign (1715–74) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the French styles in architecture, furniture, etc., prevailing in his times. In interior ornamentation the straight line and plane surface are often replaced by the irregular curved line and surface. In furniture, curved lines and rich upholstery are characteristic features. See ROCAILLE, ROCOCO. See also ARCHITECTURE, Table.

Lou'is Seize' (sāz'). [F., Louis sixteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XVI. or his reign (1774–93) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the style in architecture, furniture, etc., prevailing in his times. Architecture approached more and more the antique, while taking on a greater lightness. Decoration took up again the straight line. Interior ornamentation shows the influence of the recently discovered frescoes of Pompeii and Herculaneum. In furniture, straight lines, light and simple construction, and pastoral motives in ornamentation are characteristic.

Lou'is Treize' (trāz'). [F., Louis thirteenth.] Of or pertaining to Louis XIII. or his reign (1610–43) ; designating, resembling, or pertaining to, the French styles in architecture, furniture, etc., prevailing in his time. The architecture was of developed Renaissance style, but retained much of the Gothic picturesqueness. The designs in furniture are square and angular, and an appearance of podginess, usually accentuated by a horizontal division above the middle, is characteristic.

lounge (lounj), v. i. ; LOUNGED (lounjd) ; LOUNG'ING (loun'jĭng). [Perh. fr. lungis a tall, slow, awkward fellow. Cf. LUNGIS.] 1. To move or act in a lazy or listless way.

‖ loup'-ga'rou' (lōō'gȧ'rōō'), n. ; pl. LOUPS-GAROUS (lōō'-gȧ'rōō'). [F., fr. loup wolf + a Teutonic word akin to E. werewolf.] A werewolf ; a lycanthrope.

loup'ing ill (loup'ĭng ; lōp'ĭng). [From LOUP to leap] Veter. An enzootic, often fatal, disease of sheep and other domestic animals, of unknown cause. It is characterized by muscular tremors and spasms, followed by more or less complete paralysis. The principal lesion is an inflammation of the membranes covering the brain and spinal cord.

louse (lous), n. ; pl. LICE (līs). [ME lous, AS. lūs, pl. lȳs ; akin to D. luis, G laus, OHG lūs, Icel. lūs, Sw. lus, Dan. luus.]

Head Louse (Pediculus capitis) Much enlarged.

1. Any of certain small, wingless, usually flattened insects, parasitic on warm-blooded animals. They constitute two groups : a The true lice, or sucking lice, forming the suborder Anoplura, syn. Parasita, of the order Hemiptera, which live upon mammals and suck their blood. Numerous species infest domestic animals, and three are found upon man. the head louse (Pediculus capitis), living among and attaching its eggs, or nits, to the hairs of the head, the body louse (P. vestimenti), living on the body and clothes and laying its eggs on the latter ; and the crab louse (Phthirius inguinalis), infesting chiefly the body. b The biting lice, or bird lice, forming the order Mallophaga. Some of these infest mammals, but the majority live on birds, and feed chiefly on the skin, feathers, etc., the mouth parts being adapted for biting, not sucking. They are very annoying and often injurious to their hosts. A number of species occur on domesticated birds, as Menopon pallidum on the fowl, Lipeurus polytrapezius on the turkey, and L. squalidus on ducks.

2. Hence, any of various insects or small arachnids, crustaceans, etc., which live on animals or plants and suck their blood or juices (see FISH LOUSE, CARP LOUSE, WHALE LOUSE, BEE LOUSE, etc.). The plant lice belong to the Aphididæ and Psyllidæ, the bark lice, or scale insects, to the Coccidæ (see APHID, SCALE INSECT). The name is extended to certain forms not parasitic (cf. WOOD LOUSE, BOOK LOUSE), on account of their appearance.

louse'wort' (lous'wûrt'), n. a The stinking hellebore ; also, the stavesacre. Obs. The seeds of both these plants were used in ancient times to destroy lice. b The yellow rattle. c Now, generally, any scrophulariaceous plant of the genus Pedicularis, formerly reputed to cause sheep feeding upon them to be subject to vermin ; wood betony.

lous'y (louz'ĭ), a. ; -I-ER (-ĭ-ẽr) ; -I-EST. 1. Infested with lice.

2. Mean ; contemptible ; dirty ; vulgar ; vile.

Such lousy learning as this is. Bale.

lum'ber-man (-măn), n.; pl. -MEN (-mĕn). One who is engaged in lumbering. U. S. & Canada.

lum'bo- (lŭm'bō-). [L. lumbus loin.] A combining form used to indicate connection with, or relation to, the loins or the lumbar vertebræ.

lum'bo-sa'cral (-sā'krăl), a. Anat. Pertaining to the lumbar and sacral regions or parts; designating a ligament connecting the last lumbar vertebra and sacrum.

lumbosacral cord or nerve, a nerve formed by the fifth and a branch of the fourth lumbar, which joins the sacral plexus.

lum'bri-ca'les (lŭm'brĭ-kā'lēz), n. pl.; sing. LUMBRICALIS (-lĭs). [NL., fr. L. lumbricus earthworm.] Anat. Small muscles in the palm of the hand and sole of the foot, four in number in each case, each arising from, and accessory to, one of the tendons of the deep flexor, and inserted at the base of the digit to which the tendon passes.

lum'bri-co'sis (-kō'sĭs), n. [NL.; L. lumbricus roundworm + -osis.] Infestation of the intestines with roundworms (esp. Ascaris lumbricoides).

Lum'bri-cus (lŭm'brĭ-kŭs), n. [L. lumbricus earthworm.] Zool. A genus of oligochætous worms, including the common earthworms. See EARTHWORM.

lu'men (lū'mĕn), n.; pl. L. LUMINA (-mĭ-nȧ), E. LUMENS (-mĕnz). [L., light, an opening for light.] 1. Photom. a A unit of light flux; the flux through one square centimeter of surface, normal to the lines of flow and situated at a distance of one meter from a light source of unit intensity, the total light flux from a source of unit intensity, divided by $4\pi \times 10^4$. b The light flux through a unit of solid angle, that is, through one square centimeter of surface at one centimeter's distance from a source of unit intensity; the total light flux from a unit source divided by 4π.

2. a Bot. The cavity of a cell within the walls. b Anat. & Zoöl. The cavity or passageway of a tubular organ, as the lumen of a blood vessel or tubular gland.

Lu'mière' proc'ess (lü'myâr'). A process of color photography, invented by Auguste and Louis Lumière of Paris, which uses (in an ordinary camera) a plate having a layer of mixed green, violet, and orange-colored starch grains in front of the sensitive film. The plate, developed as a positive, shows the picture in its original colors. A green object in the field, e. g., reduces the silver of the film behind the green grains only (since the other grains do not transmit green light), and, by developing, this part of the plate becomes transparent behind the green grains, but opaque and black behind the violet and orange. Colored photographs can be printed on paper from such plates.

lu'mi-nal (lū'mĭ-năl), a. Of or pertaining to a lumen.

lu'mi-na-ry (-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [F. luminaire, OF. also luminarie, LL. luminarium, L. luminare a light or lamp, which was lighted in the churches, a luminary, fr. lumen, luminis, light, fr. lucere to be light, to shine, lux, lucis, light. See LIGHT.] 1. A body that gives light, esp. one of the heavenly bodies "Radiant luminary." Skelton.

2. An artificial light; an illumination.

3. A source of intellectual "light" or progress.

lu'mi-nate (lū'mĭ-nāt), v. t. [L. luminatus, p. p. of luminare to illumine, fr. lumen light. Cf. LIMN.] To illuminate. — lu'mi-na'tion (-nā'shŭn), n. Both Rare.

lu'mi-nes'cence (-nĕs'ĕns), n. [See LUMINESCENT.] Physics. Any emission of light not ascribable directly to incandescence, and therefore occurring at low temperatures. It may be produced by physiological processes, as in the firefly; by chemical action (chem'i-lu'mi-nes'cence or chem'i-co-lu'mi-nes'cence); by friction (tri'bo-lu'mi-nes'cence); or by electric action (e-lec'tro-lu'mi-nes'cence, such as the glow of gases in vacuum tubes when subjected to electric oscillations of high frequency, or cathode luminescence, as the glow of certain bodies when subjected to cathode rays); by certain bodies while crystallizing (crys'tal-lo-lu'mi-nes'cence); by suddenly warming certain bodies previously exposed to light (ther'mo-lu'mi-nes'cence); or by exposure to light (pho'to-lu'mi-nes'cence, called fluorescence if observed during excitation, phosphorescence if observed after excitation). Luminescence occurring without exposure to light or to any of the forms of external excitation usually necessary to its production is called au'to-lu'mi-nes'cence, and is confined to radioactive substances See PHOSPHORESCENCE, FLUORESCENCE.

luminescence lamp. Elec. A kind of fluorescent lamp whose illumination is due to an electric discharge in a highly exhausted space.

lu'mi-nif'er-ous (-nĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. lumen light + -ferous.] Producing light; yielding light; transmitting light; as, the luminiferous ether.

lu'mi-nist (lū'mĭ-nĭst), n. Also F. lu'mi'niste' (lü'mē'nēst'). Paint. A painter who studies especially the effects of light on colored objects; an impressionist or plein-airist.

lu'mi-nos'i-ty (-nŏs'ĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). Quality or state of being luminous, also, a luminous thing.

Luminosity means the brightness with which a color appears to the eye compared with a white surface, which is illuminated simultaneously by the same white light C. G. Zander

This word luminosity is also often used by artists in an entirely different sense, they calling color in a painting luminous simply because it recalls to the mind the impression of light, not because it actually reflects much light to the eye. O. N. Rood.

lu'na-cy (lū'nȧ-sĭ), n.; pl. -CIES (-sĭz). [See LUNATIC.] 1. Orig., the kind of insanity which is interrupted by lucid intervals, formerly supposed to be influenced by the changes of the moon; now, any form of unsoundness of mind, except (usually) idiocy (which see), mental derangement or alienation; insanity; madness.

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shak.

2. A fit or attack of lunacy. Obs.

Hazard so near us as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shak.

3. Wild foolishness; extravagant folly; madness; — often used hyperbolically.

The world will never be rid of religious lunacies. Dr. H. More.

Syn.—Derangement, craziness, mania, insanity.

Luna moth. A large and beautiful American moth (Tropæa, syn. Actias, luna), having long tails to the hind wings. Its wings are delicate light green, with a stripe of purple along the front edge of the anterior wings, the other margins being edged with pale yellow. Each wing has a transparent spot surrounded by rings of light yellow, blue, and black. The caterpillar commonly feeds on the hickory, sassafras, maple, sweet gum, etc., and spins a thin cocoon in a crumpled leaf.

Luna Moth (Tropæa luna) (⅔) lu'nar (lū'nȧr), a. [L. lunaris, fr. luna the moon. See LUNA; cf. LUNARY.] 1. Of or pert. to the moon; resembling the moon; orbed or crescent; lunate.

2. Measured by the moon's revolutions, as, a lunar day.

3. Influenced by the moon, as in properties. Obs.

4. [See LUNA, 2.] Pertaining to or containing silver.

lunar bone, Anat. & Zoöl., the second bone of the proximal series of the carpus; — called also semilunar, and intermedium. —l. caustic, Med. Chem., silver nitrate, $AgNO_3$, which is prepared to be used as a cautery. —l. consonant. See SOLAR CONSONANT. —l. cycle, the Metonic cycle or the Callippic cycle (see these terms). —l. day. See DAY, n., 2 & 3. —l. dial, an obsolete instrument for showing the hour of night by the shadow of a gnomon in moonlight, similarly to that of the sun on a sundial. —l. distance, the angular distance of the moon from the sun, a star, or a planet used (now rarely) in finding longitude. —l. ecliptic limit, Astron., the space of 12° on the moon's orbit from the node, within which, if the moon happens to be at full, it will be eclipsed. —l. equation, in the Gregorian calendar, the correction for the error of the lunar cycle, as in the epact. —l. horoscope, Astrol., the region where the moon appears when the sun is at the ascending point of the east; the part of fortune. —l. hour, the twenty-fourth part of a lunar day. —l. inequality. a One of many variations in the moon's motion from a true ellipse, caused by the perturbative action of the sun, the planets, etc. b One of the small and nearly inappreciable fluctuations of the magnetic needle from its mean position due to the moon. —l. mansion, any of the 28 divisions of the ecliptic, each of which contains the moon on successive days. —l. method, the method of finding longitude (as of a ship) by comparing the local time of taking a given lunar distance with the Greenwich (or other standard) time as ascertained by "working the lunar." —l. month. See MONTH. —l. observation, an observation of a lunar distance by means of a sextant or circle, with the altitudes of the bodies, and the time, for computing the longitude. —l. star, a star whose geocentric distances from the moon are given in nautical almanacs, to be used in computing longitudes. —l. tables. a Astron. Mathematical data, or tables, for computing the moon's position at any past or future time. b Navig. Tables for correcting an observed lunar distance on account of refraction and parallax. —l. theory, Astron., the theory of the moon's motion as deduced from the law of gravitation. —l. wind, a tidal breeze with a period of half a lunar day, whose source of energy is in the lunar attraction applied through the tides. —l. year. See YEAR.

2. A lunar distance or observation.

lu'nar-di-ur'nal, a. Relating to, or occasioned by, the position of the moon in its daily revolution round the earth.

lu-na're (lū-nā'rē; 115), n.; pl. LUNARIA (-rĭ-ȧ). [NL.] Anat. & Zoöl. The lunar bone.

Lu-na'ri-a (-rĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See LUNAR, a.] Bot. A small genus of European brassicaceous plants distinguished by the cordate leaves and broad silicles. The species are cultivated under the name of satinpod or honesty.

lu-na'ri-an, n. [See LUNAR, LUNA.] 1. A supposed inhabitant of the moon.

2. A student of the moon; formerly, one who ascertained longitude by observing the moon.

lu'nate (lū'nāt) } a. [L. lunatus crescent-shaped, fr.
lu'nat-ed (-nāt-ĕd) } luna the moon.] Crescent-shaped; as, a lunate spot or marking. — lu'nate-ly, adv.

lu'na-tic (lū'nȧ-tĭk), a. [L. lunaticus, fr. luna the moon: cf. F. lunatique. See LUNAR.] 1. Affected with lunacy; moonstruck; now, insane; mad; — used in popular and legal language, but rarely in technical medical language.

Wyclif (Matt. xvii. 15).

2. Evincing lunacy or insanity; crazy; as, lunatic talk.

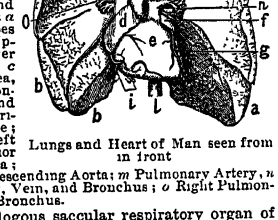
GILL). In man the lungs are of flattened, somewhat conical shape, suspended freely in and normally occupying the entire lateral parts of the thorax, being attached only at the root, or place where the bronchus, or air tube, and the pulmonary arteries and veins enter. The right lung is divided into upper, middle, and lower lobes; the left lung into only two. Each lung has a broad base resting on the diaphragm, and tapers above to a narrow apex, and is enveloped in a serous coat derived from the pleura. The bronchus, having entered the lung, divides repeatedly, the ultimate branches ending in cavities (infundibula and air cells). The blood vessels form a dense network upon the walls of the air cells, and through their thin walls respiration takes place. The lungs develop as a hollow diverticulum from the ventral wall of the alimentary canal. In the lower vertebrates, as amphibians, they retain more nearly the saclike condition, the subdivisions of the interior being much less complex than in mammals and birds (see AIR BLADDER, 1).



Lungs and Heart of Man seen from in front

Lu'ther-an (lū'thẽr-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Luther, adhering to the doctrines of Luther or the Lutheran Church.

Lu'ther-an, n. Eccl. Hist. One who accepts or adheres to the doctrines of Luther or the Lutheran Church. The system of faith held by Lutherans is set forth in the Augsburg Confession and in a number of other symbols, known as Luther's catechisms, the Apology of the Augsburg Confession, the Schmalkalden Articles, and the Formula of Concord. The cardinal doctrine is that of justification by faith alone. The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper are held to be channels of grace. They believe that "in the Holy Supper there are present with the elements and are received sacramentally and supernaturally the body and blood of the Lord Jesus Christ," but reject both transubstantiation and consubstantiation, which latter view is attributed to them by some writers. They observe the Christian year, have a liturgy, and are in polity, except in the Scandinavian countries, where they are episcopal, fundamentally congregational, the synodical system, which prevails, being characterized by the conferring of a measure of judicial and executive authority upon the synods by the congregations. The Lutherans constitute a large part of the Protestants of Germany. In Prussia and some of the other German states, the Lutheran and Reformed Churches are united as the Evangelical Church, which is established as the state religion. The Lutheran Ly'co-per'don (lī'kō-pûr'dŏn), n. [NL. ; Gr. λύκος wolf + περδεσθαι to break wind.] Bot. A genus of fungi typifying the family Lycoperdaceæ, characterized by a double peridium, the outer layer of which is fragile, often warty or spiny, the peridium also opening by an apical mouth. The genus includes mostly small forms. None of the species are poisonous and many are edible.

Ly'co-per'si-con (-pûr'sĭ-kŏn), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λυκοπέρσιον an Egyptian plant.] Bot. A small genus of South American solanaceous herbs closely allied to Solanum, but differing in the shape of the anthers. L. lycopersicum, the tomato, is now cultivated in all parts of the world.

ly'co-pin (lī'kō-pĭn), n. [Lycopus + -in.] Pharm. An astringent, styptic, and sedative precipitate obtained from a tincture of a species of Lycopus, the bugleweed.

ly'co-pod (-pŏd), n. Bot. A plant of the genus Lycopodium ; hence, by extension, a plant of the order Lycopodiales ; a club moss.

Ly'co-po'di-a'ce-æ (-pō'dĭ-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of homosporous fern allies, the club mosses, containing four living genera, of which Lycopodium is much the largest and most important. They are terrestrial mosslike plants with simple distichous or many-ranked leaves. — ly'co-po'di-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Ly'co-po'di-a'les (-ā'lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. An order of pteridophytic plants comprising the living families Lycopodiaceæ, Selaginellaceæ, and Isoetaceæ, and represented by two families of fossil plants in the coal measures. The order is distinguished by having the sporangia borne in the axils of tubular or scalelike leaves. See LEPIDODENDRON, SIGILLARIA.

Lycopodium (L. clavatum).

Ly'co-po'di-um (-pō'dĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; Gr. λύκος wolf + πούς, ποδός, a foot.] 1. Bot. A large and widely distributed genus of plants, typifying the family Lycopodiaceæ. They are erect or creeping, with evergreen 1-nerved leaves in four to many ranks. The sporangia are borne in the axils of ordinary leaves or aggregated in strobilelike sporophores. Many species, as L. clavatum, L. complanatum, and L. obscurum, are employed in Christmas decoration under the names ground pine, ground fir, etc. There are numerous fossil species. See GROUND PINE. 2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus. 3. [l. c.] Pharm. = LYCOPODIUM POWDER.

lycopodium powder. A fine yellowish powder composed of the spores of various species of Lycopodium, esp. of L. clavatum. It is highly inflammable, and is used in the manufacture of fireworks and the artificial representation of lightning ; also in medicine as an absorbent in excoriations of the skin and as a coating for pills.

Ly-cop'sis (lī-kŏp'sĭs), n. [L., a plant, perh. bugloss, Gr. λύκοψις.] Bot. A small genus of Old World boraginaceous plants having bristly foliage and small blue flowers in terminal scorpioid racemes. L. arvensis, the small wild bugloss, is naturalized in the eastern United States.

Ly'co-pus (lī'kō-pŭs), n [NL.; Gr. λύκος wolf + πούς foot : — in allusion to the digitate leaves of some species.] Bot. A small genus of mints allied to Mentha, but having only two stamens and nonaromatic foliage. The species are natives of temperate regions. L. virginicus is the bugleweed. L. europæus is the water horehound.

Ly-co'ris (lī-kō'rĭs ; 201), n. [Gr. Λυκωρίς, a woman's name, prob. confused with Λυκωριάς, name of a nymph.] Bot. A small genus of bulbous amaryllidaceous plants, natives of China and Japan, having umbels of red or yellow flowers with recurved and crisped perianth segments. They are frequently cultivated. Also [l. c.], a bulb or flower of this genus.

Ly-cos'i-dæ (lī-kŏs'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. λύκος a kind of spider, lit., a wolf.] Zoöl. A family of spiders, which construct no web, but chase their prey. They are mostly large, dark-colored, long-legged, hairy spiders, differing from the tarantulas in their usually inferior size and in the claw of the mandible moving horizontally, not vertically. Ly-co'sa (lī-kō'sa), containing the typical wolf spiders, and Dolomedes are the best-known genera.

Ly'da web'worm' (lĭ'dà). [NL. Lyda, fr. Gr. Αυδός a Lydian.] Any of several sawflies of the genus Lyda, whose larvæ are gregarious and infest the twigs of pine, spruce, cherry, and other trees, making large unsightly webs in which they live and feed.

lydd'ite (lĭd'īt), n. A high explosive, chiefly picric acid, used as a shell explosive in the British service ; — so named from the proving grounds at Lydd, England.

Lyd'i-an (lĭd'ĭ-ăn), a. [L. Lydius, fr. Lydia, Gr. Αυδία.] 1. Of or pertaining to Lydia, an ancient country of western Asia Minor, or its inhabitants. From early in the 7th to the middle of the 6th century B. C., Lydia was one of the most important Asiatic powers, being noted for commercial and industrial enterprise. The wealth of its kings, especially the last, Crœsus, who was conquered by Cyrus, was proverbial. Its civilization was a mixture of the Greek and Oriental, and its religion centered about the orgiastic worship of Attis and Cybele. 2. Hence, in reference to Lydian culture, soft or effeminate ; in reference to the orgiastic worship of Attis and Cybele, voluptuous. Cf. LYDIAN MODE.

lymph (lĭmf), n. [L. lympha, for earlier lumpa, water, goddess of water, of uncertain origin ; perh. fr. Gr. νύμφη bride, young girl, nymph, goddess of moisture (cf. NYMPH) : cf. F. lymphe. Cf. LYMPHATIC.] 1. A spring of water, hence, water, or a pure, transparent liquid like water.

> Nothing of earthly mixture might distain. Trench.

2. The sap of plants. Obs. 3. Anat. A weakly alkaline, nearly colorless coagulable fluid, contained in the lymphatic vessels. It contains colorless corpuscles (see LYMPHOCYTE), but is free from red corpuscles. Lymph may be regarded as consisting chiefly of blood plasma which has exuded from the blood capillaries in the various tissues and organs, and has been taken up by the lymphatic vessels to be finally discharged by the thoracic and right lymphatic ducts into the great veins near the heart. Cf. CHYLE. 4. Med. a A fibrinous material exuded from the blood vessels in inflammation. In the process of healing it is either absorbed, or converted into connective tissue binding the inflamed surfaces together. b A fluid containing certain products resulting from the growth of specific micro-organisms upon some culture medium, and supposed to be possessed of curative properties. See KOCH'S LYMPH.

lym'phad (lĭm'făd), n. [Prob. fr. Gael. long-fhada ; long ship + fada long.] A galley or small vessel fitted for both sails and oars, — borne as a charge in heraldry.

lym-phad'e-ni'tis (lĭm-făd'ĕ-nī'tĭs ; lĭm'fà-dĕ-), n. [NL. ; lympho- + adenitis.] Med. Inflammation of the lymphatic glands ; lymphitis.

lym-phad'e-noid (lĭm-făd'ĕ-noid), a. [lympho- + -adeno- + -oid.] Anat. Resembling a lymphatic gland.

lym-phad'e-no'ma (lĭm-făd'ĕ-nō'mà ; lĭm'fà-dĕ-), n. ; L. pl. -MATA (-tà). [NL. ; lympho- + adeno- + -oma.] Med. a Lymphoma. b Lymphosarcoma. c A disease characterized by hyperplasia of the lymphatic glands ; Hodgkin's disease.

lym-phæ'mi-a, lym-phe'mi-a (lĭm-fē'mĭ-à), n. [NL. ; lympho- + -xemia.] Med. Condition marked by the presence of abnormal quantity of lymphocytes in the blood ; lymphatic leucocythæmia.

lym'pha-gogue (lĭm'fà-gŏg), n. [lympho- + -agogue.] Physiol. A substance which, when injected into the blood, increases the flow of lymph, such as commercial peptone, extract of dried leeches, sugar, and salt.

lym-phan'gi-al (lĭm-făn'jĭ-ăl), a. [See LYMPHANGITIS.] Anat. Of or pertaining to the lymphatic vessels.

lym-phan'gi-ec'ta-sis (-ĕk'tà-sĭs), n. [NL. ; lympho- + angiectasis.] Med. Marked permanent dilatation of the lymphatics. — lym-phan'gi-ec-tat'ic (-ĕk-tăt'ĭk), a.

lym-phan'gi-o'ma (-ō'mà), n. ; L. pl. -MATA (-tà). [NL , lympho- + angioma.] Med. A localized dilatation of the lymphatics ; also, a tumor so formed. — lym-phan'gi-om'a-tous (-ŏm'à-tŭs ; -ō'mà-tŭs), a.

lymph'ate (lĭm'fāt), lymph'at-ed (-făt-ĕd), a. [L. lymphatus driven out of one's senses, mad ; perh. fr. Gr. νυμφόληπτος caught by nymphs. See LYMPH.] Lymphatic (in sense 2). Obs. or R.

lym-phat'ic (lĭm-făt'ĭk), a. [L. lymphaticus distracted, frantic : cf. F. lymphatique pertaining to lymph. See LYMPH, LYMPHATE.] 1. Of, pertaining to, containing, or conveying, lymph ; as, lymphatic ducts or vessels. 2. Madly enthusiastic ; frantic. Obs. "Lymphatic rapture." Sir T. Herbert. 3. Designating, or having, a temperament in which the complexion lacks color and the tissues seem to be of loose texture, or hence, a temperament lacking energy or indisposed to exertion or excitement. See TEMPERAMENT.

lymphatic gland, Anat., one of the rounded masses of lymphoid tissue, surrounded by a capsule of connective tissue, which occur in various parts of the body in the course of the lymphatic vessels. They are not true glands, but consist of a reticulum of connective tissue fibers in the meshes of which are contained numerous small round cells, the lymphoid cells, having a large, round, deeply staining nucleus. These cells, when carried off by the lymph flowing through the gland, become lymphocytes. — l. nodule, Anat., a small simple lymphatic gland.

lym-phat'ic, n. 1. Anat. A vessel in which lymph is contained or conveyed ; a lymphatic vessel. The lymphatics originate as interfibrillar or intercellular clefts or spaces in the various tissues and organs, the smaller ones having no distinct walls, or walls composed only of endothelial cells. Larger ones resemble veins in structure. The larger lymphatics are mostly arranged in a superficial set just beneath the skin, and a deep set. They generally have numerous small dilatations, anastomoses, and valves in their course, which is also interrupted by the lymphatic glands (which see). Eventually the various lymphatics enter the thoracic duct and right lymphatic duct, which pour the lymph into the veins. 2. A mad enthusiast ; a lunatic. Obs.

lym'pha-tism (lĭm'fà-tĭz'm), n. [lymphatic + -ism.] 1. The lymphatic temperament. 2. Med. Morbid condition produced by excessive growth of lymphatic tissues.

lymph follicle. Anat. A small rounded mass of dense lymphoid tissue, usually less compact in the central part, occurring isolated, or forming part of a lymphatic gland or other large mass of lymphoid tissue.

lymph heart. Zoöl. A muscular expansion of a lymphatic vessel near its opening into a vein, and serving by its pulsations to drive the lymph toward the veins. They occur chiefly in the lower vertebrates.

lymph node. Anat. A lymphatic gland.

lym'pho- (lĭm'fō-), lymph-. [See LYMPH.] Combining form used in medicine, physiology, etc., to denote connection with, or relation to, lymph or the lymphatics.

lym'pho-cele (-sēl), n. Med. [lympho- + -cele.] A tumor containing an abnormal amount of lymph.

lym'pho-cyte (-sīt), n. [lympho- + -cyte.] Anat. One of the small colorless, nucleated, amœboid cells found in the lymph and derived from the lymphatic glands (which see) and other lymphoid tissues. They measure about 0.01 mm. in diameter, and consist of a large simple rounded nucleus with a thin layer of surrounding cytoplasm. They become leucocytes when they pass into the blood, but remain, for a time at least, readily distinguishable.

lym'pho-cy-thæ'mi-a, -the'mi-a (-sī-thē'mĭ-à), n. [NL. ; lymphocyte + -æmia.] Med. Excess of lymphocytes in the blood.

lym-phog'e-nous (lĭm-fŏj'e-nŭs), a. [lympho- + -genous.] Med. Lymph-producing ; lymphogenic.

lymph'oid (lĭm'foid), a. [lymph + -oid.] Anat. a Resembling lymph. b Resembling a lymphatic gland in structure ; adenoid. — lymphoid cells, the characteristic cells of lymphoid tissue. — l. tissue, the characteristic tissue of the lymphatic glands (see LYMPHATIC GLAND), spleen, tonsils, etc., also found diffused or in small ill-defined masses in various parts of the body, esp. in the mucosa of the digestive and respiratory tracts ; — called also adenoid tissue.

ly-sat'i-nine (lī-săt'ĭ-nĭn ; -nēn) } λύσις a loosing + creatine, creatinine.] Physiol. Chem. An organic base obtained on decomposition of various proteids, — now considered by many to be a mixture of lysine and arginine.

lys'i-dine (lĭs'ĭ-dĭn ; -dēn ; 184), n. Also -din. [Gr. λύσις a loosing + methylglyoxalidin, the chemical name which Ladenborg rejected in favor of this.] Pharm. Chem. A hygroscopic crystalline base, $C_7H_{12}N_2$, derived from glyoxaline. It forms a very soluble salt with uric acid, and hence is used in medicine as a solvent for the latter.

ly-sig'e-nous (lī-sĭj'ĕ-nŭs), a. [Gr. λύσις a loosing + -genous.] Bot. Formed by the breaking down or dissolution of adjoining cells, as certain intercellular spaces. The lysigenous cavities in tissue usually contain water or secretion products. Cf. SCHIZOGENOUS. — ly-sig'e-nous-ly, adv.

Ly'si-lo'ma (lī'sĭ-lō'mȧ), n. [NL., prob. fr. Gr. λύσις a loosing + λῶμα border, because at ripening the sides of the pod are loosened.] Bot. A small genus of tropical American mimosaceous trees, having bipinnate leaves, few stamens, and a flat, straight, dehiscent pod. Several of the species, as L. sabicu and L. bahamensis, are useful timber trees. See SABICU WOOD, MADEIRA WOOD.

Ly'si-ma'chi-a (lĭ'sĭ-mā'kĭ-ȧ ; -măk'ĭ-ȧ ; lĭs'ĭ- ; 277), n. [NL., fr. L. lysimachia a plant, Gr. λυσίμαχον, fr. the proper name Λυσίμαχος Lysimachus ; λύσις a loosing + μάχη battle, strife.] Bot. A large widely distributed genus of primulaceous herbs, the loosestrifes, distinguished by leafy stems and yellow or white flowers without staminodia. L. nummularia, the moneywort, is often cultivated.

ly'sin (lī'sĭn), n. [See LYSINE.] Physiol. Chem. Any of a class of substances capable of dissolving bacteria, blood corpuscles, or the like. See BACTERIOLYSIN, HÆMOLYSIN.

ly'sine (lī'sĭn ; -sēn ; 184), n. Also ly'sin. [Gr. λύσις a loosing, dissolution.] Physiol. Chem. An organic base, $C_6H_{14}O_2N_2$, formed in the artificial decomposition of protamines and many proteids, and also in tryptic digestion. It forms crystalline salts with silver nitrate and chloroplatinic acid. Chemically, it is a diamino-caproic acid.

Ly-sip'pan (lī-sĭp'ăn), a. Of or pertaining to the Greek sculptor Lysippus (fl. 4th century B. C.) or his school or style. His works are said by ancient writers to have been all in bronze, and are remarkable for their lifelike characterization and careful and accurate execution, shown esp. in the treatment of the hair. His representations of the male human body are said to show a new system of proportions, characterized by a small head and comparatively long arms and legs, which gives the figures an athletic appearance. None of his works have been identified, and only the marble Apoxyomenos in the Vatican can be thought a close copy of one of them.

ly'sis (lī'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. λυσις.] Med. a The resolution or favorable termination of a disease, coming on gradually and not marked by abrupt change, as distinguished from crisis, in which the improvement is sudden and marked. b Action of a lysin ; cell destruction.

-lysis. [Gr. λυσις a loosing, fr. λύειν to loose.] A suffix signifying a loosing, dissolving, solution, dissolution ; as, cyto*lysis*, electro*lysis*, para*lysis*, etc.

ly'sol (lī'sōl ; -sŏl), n. [Gr. λύσις a loosing, dissolving + 2d -ol.] Pharm. A brown oily liquid, soluble in water, made by dissolving coal-tar oil of a certain grade in fat, and then saponifying. It contains cresols in large amount, and is used as a disinfectant.

lys'sa (lĭs'ȧ), n. [NL. See LYTTA.] Med Hydrophobia. The plural (lyssæ) has been used to signify the pustules supposed to be developed under the tongue in hydrophobia.
